Severely Scalded.

At about 11 a. m. last Monday, a little daughter of Newt Cradtree, of near Shelburn, fell into a boiler of scalding water and, though quickly taken therefrom, was dangerously scalded, one arm, hand, side, breast and face being injured. Mrs. Cradtree was doing the family washing. She had just removed the boiler of scalding water from the stove and had stepped to the pump, but a few feet away, to get a bucket of cold water to pour into the boiler, when the little one managed to get to the boiler and fell in.

Dr. Prill was summoned at once and did all that was possible to do to relieve the little one's suffering. He does not know just what the result will be, but hopes to bring her out all right.

LATER—As we go to press Dr. Prill records the condition of the little girl as being most grave, with a fatal ending probable.
