The Recall

democratic—conception of representative government that contemplates that the representative will be indifferent of the wishes of his constituents. The democratic theory is that the people will think for themselves and select representatives to give expression to their thoughts. The moral and intellectual standard of the representative will not be lowered by an increased watchfulness on the part of the public. Banks have not lost anything in standing and character by the fact that they are now examined and may be closed without a moment's notice. On the contrary, the banking level has been raised and it will be raised still more when the law requires the bank to give absolute security to depositors, so officials will be better when the betrayal of trust—the embezzlement of power—is dealt with as a crime.

But if independence is the thing desired, is that not already menaced by frequent elections? If independence is necessary, how can we secure it except by life tenure? How can a congressman act independently if eleven months after the first regular session convenes his constituents may defeat him at the polls because of some vote he has cast or some speech he has made? In state and city the situation is the same. The recall asked for would only be invoked on rare occasions, while the form of recall which we now have in frequent elections acts as a restraint on all officials and acts constantly. How can we condemn the proposed recall as dangerous or destructive, and at the same time approve of short official terms? And does not impeachment act as a restraint on independence? The regular election is a form of impeachment; it gives the people a chance to remove at stated times, by refusing re-election. The recall simply goes a step farther and permits the voters to shorten the term when, in their judgement, the official has betrayed his trust. The fact is, that opposition to the recall is a revision to aristocracy, plutocracy and monarchy. The objection rests upon a distrust of the capacity of the people or upon a contempt for their rights. Because the people have a right to self government and the capacity for self government, and because the people are conscious of their right and confident of their capacity, they favor the recall—and will, in time, secure it.—Bryan's Commoner.
