Entertained

The sewing society met at the home of Mrs. DeVaney Thursday afternoon. 14 members were present to enjoy a good social time in connection with their sewing. Ice cream and fiesta wafers were served by the hostess during the afternoon. The ladies departed declaring they had spent a most pleasant time. Mrs. R. Shelton invited the ladies to meet with her next Thursday.

The Rain Fairies on Their Way to Earth

Daddy's Bedtime Story—The Good Little Rain Fairies And Their Work

THE rain was pattering gently upon the porch roof making nice, sleepy music for the children's bedtime, and Evelyn lifted her head from the pillow to stare out into the gray, misty night.

"I wonder if there are any rain fairies, daddy?" she murmured.

"To be sure there are," smiled daddy.

"Then tell us about them," begged Jack. "This," as the wind came sighing through the cedar trees, "is just the sort of night for a fairy story."

"Very well," said daddy. "I'll do my best."

"The rain fairies live, some of them do anyway, in lovely castles high up in the sky. These castles are of wonderful shapes, with tall turrets of shimmering silver and sometimes with deep dungeons of the deepest black. Their dwellings are unlike earth houses, for the castles move here and there from place to place.

"The little rain fairies are mostly good elves. Their queen, who is a kind, gentle creature, when she looks down to earth and sees that her elves are needed below, will send her messengers, the soft breezes, to tell the fairies to hasten down, for somewhere there are fields of grain that need their care or perhaps some little children's gardens that need tending. If the rain fairies do not hurry and obey, then she will send a rough wind, and if they are still slow by and by will come wild winds that will beat them and tear their castles to pieces, sending the drops scurrying in terror on their way.

"They have many tasks, these little rain fairies. Some of them join hands and turn the wheel that moves the machinery in great factories. Many spread out and carry boats and even ships from place to place. Others, clear and lovely, give themselves to quench the thirst of living creatures. Some elves hasten to the roots of plants to coax them into life and health. Were it not for the little rain elves, men and animals would have no food or drink. So you see why their queen is so strict.

"Their queen watches them from above. When each has done his task he turns his little face up to her, and if she is satisfied she says, 'Come home now, little fairy!' Then the elf changes his hard workaday clothes for a filmy, fleecy robe of purest white and, rising slowly from the earth, floats back again to the castle in the sky, there to stay until his queen finds another task for him on earth. There are millions of these little fairies at work all the time, and even when we cannot see them they are gently kissing the leaves with their moist lips or twining their soft arms in loving farewell about the flowers they have made so beautiful."

Superior to It.
The tramp leaned against the door jamb, while Miss Annabel Steadon peered out at him through the screen, and he gazed past her at the kitchen table.

"You look strong," said Miss Annabel. "Are you equal to the task of sawing and splitting half a cord of wood?"

"Equal to it, madam?" said the tramp. "The word is inadequate. I am superior to it." And a moment later the sunshine played on the door jamb where his figure had so lately leaned, and down in the road drifted a cloud of dust raised by his patient, plodding feet.

Thousands of men in England earn their living during a considerable portion of the year by their ability to walk and work on tall stilts. Most of them are employed in the hop fields of Kent and other districts, where they have displaced the high stepadders formerly in use. During the pole stringing season the stilt walkers, twelve feet from the ground, perform the work with ease and without loss of time or motion. A trained stiltman will do the work of four or five men working with stepadders.

Grange Meeting
An interesting program is being prepared for next Grange day. Cyrus H. Walker will be present and give a talk. Watch for program in next week's issue of the News.

A Good Position

Can be had by ambitious young men and ladies in the field of "Wireless" or railway telegraphy. Since the 8-hour law became effective, and since the Wireless companies are establishing stations throughout the country there is a great shortage of telegraphers. Positions pay beginners from $70 to $90 per month, with good chances of advancement. The National Telegraph Institute of Portland, Ore., operates under supervision of R. R. and Wireless officials and places all graduates into positions. It will pay you to write to them for full details.

A Broken Bone.
In case of an accident in which a bone is broken your first duty after notifying a surgeon is to provide support for the injured member in the form of an improvised splint. Flat pieces of board, as broad if possible as the limb and slightly longer than the broken bone, canes, umbrellas—in fact, anything that will accomplish your end may be used. In adjusting these pad with any soft material that is at hand. Straw, leaves or cushions made of grass may be used. Avoid any pressure on the injured part, cover it with a cloth and keep wet with clean cold water. —Woman's Home Companion.

A Doubting Father.
George Manville Fenn was in the Reform club one afternoon, says a London Journal, when he noticed that an old gentleman, a friend of his, was looking rather perturbed, so he inquired if there was anything the matter. "Well," said the old gentleman, "the fact is my son has got a play coming out tonight, and I fear it will be a ghastly failure. He can write pretty little plays when he likes, but this one he has written is a nonsense deal sort of a thing, and I'm sure it won't do at all. However, I suppose I must go and see it." The son's name was William S. Gilbert, and the play was "Trial by Jury."

The Origin of Carrier Pigeons.
The origin of the use of the carrier pigeon is lost in obscurity, but the first people of whom we have any record of employing it are the Greeks. By them it was used with great success, and the knowledge they had acquired they imparted to the Romans, who first used it as a message bearer about 120 years before the Christian era. About 500 years ago pigeons formed part of a telegraphic system adopted by the Turks, who erected high towers thirty or forty miles apart. They were provided with pigeons, and sentinels stood constantly ready to secure the messages as the birds arrived.—London Standard.

The Worship of the Moon.
The Moslem still slaps his hands at the sight of the new moon and mutters a prayer, although the Koran appears to forbid the practice in the words, "Bend not in adoration of the sun or moon." Herodotus accuses the ancient Persians of being moon worshippers, and, though they denied the practice, the following passage from the Zend Avesta would seem to be conclusive: "We sacrifice to the new moon, the holy and master of holiness; we sacrifice to the full moon, the holy and master of holiness."

The Broken Heart.
A girl who had refused young Lansing said to a friend: "I have broken his heart, I fear."

"You have. You certainly have," the friend replied. "You've broken it right in half."

"In half? What do you mean?"

"I mean that he takes to girls out to the theater every night now."—Exchange.
