Daddy's Bedtime Story

How Little Katykin Watered Auntie's Flowers

WHAT kind of a story are you going to tell us tonight, daddy?" said Katykin, interrupted Jack. "What a funny name." "Yes," replied daddy, "but that's what she was called. Now, this little girl had always lived in the city and knew very little about country vegetables and flowers, so when her aunt invited her to stay with her in the country Katykin had a lot of things to learn. "Water the big geranium in the porch for me; there's a dear," said her aunt one evening when the sun had been shining down all day and the flowers in the garden were tired and thirsty. "Yes, auntie, I'll do it," said Katykin, pleased to be trusted. "How much water should I give it?" "Give it a watering not full size," said auntie, "and more if it seems to want it. The others must wait. I'm too busy to water them tonight." "Yes, did you see that?" said one little daisy at the bottom of the path to another. "There won't be any nice water trickling over the borders to us tonight." "Oh, dear!" sighed the second daisy. "And I'm so thirsty and tired!" "What, Katykin found the watering pot and poured it slowly over the big geranium till there was not a drop left." "It's soaked it all in. I must get some more," said Katykin. So off she went and filled the watering pot again and poured and poured and poured. Yet still the geranium seemed to be thirsty. "Four things! It must have been thirsty," thought Katykin, and she went back and forth seven times, filling the pot and giving the flower water. "At the eighth time her aunt came back. "Who, Katykin, she said, "what has happened? Has there been a flood?" So the water ran down to the gate was a perfect river. There was a hole in the flower pot which Katykin didn't know about which accounted for the deluge. "Wasn't it lucky for us that Katykin watered the geranium?" said one daisy at the bottom of the garden path to another daisy. "Yes," said the second daisy. "I like Katykin's way of watering very much. We've had a regular little river all to ourselves."

Daddy's Bedtime Story

How the Peddler Boy Found His Fortune

TELL us a fairy story tonight, daddy," urged the children. "All right, then; I'll have to think one up. I think I'll tell one about a boy peddler. He was a poor boy who had no parents, and long ago in the days when there were fairy folk he went about the country selling shoes, levers and combs and ribbons and things of that sort. And always he was longing to see the fairy folk. "Perhaps they'll make my fortune," he said. "The peddler boy was a very kind boy. So when he came to where a tall black tree grew along the road and sat down to eat his luncheon of bread and cheese he noticed at once a sad chirping and, looking around, he spied a poor grasshopper plumped to the trunk of the tree by a pine tree. "Four things," said the peddler boy, and he gently pulled the grasshopper out of its wings and placed the insect on the stalk of a tall plant that it might rest before flying away. "Ever surprised he was to hear a tiny voice come from the throat of the little grasshopper. "Mortal boy," said the small voice, "sleep tonight under the elder tree that grows by the bridge. You shall see the fairies, and your fortune will be made. "Then the peddler boy remembered that that was midsummer day. On midsummer night the fairies have their grand feast and then if ever you mortal see them. "So after he had gone the rounds of the villagers and sold a few trifles he made his way to the stream. All night long he lay under the elder tree, and it was well after dawn when he awakened. "A party of horsemen was crossing the bridge, and one pointed to the peddler boy, saying, "See, sire, here is a lad who has slept under the elder tree." "Let us hear his story," said the king, for he rode at the head of this party dressed company. "The little peddler boy stood up, not at all afraid of those grim gentlemen, as every man would be in such company in which he had been all night, and he told the story of what he had seen under the elder tree that grew by the banks of the stream. "It was a beautiful story and so beautifully told that the king exclaimed: "How we have no peddler boy, but a poet. Join us, my lad, and you shall be taught as poets are taught, and one day perhaps you may sing of us and our court as prettily as you have sung of fairyland." "And so the poor peddler boy's fortune was made."

would be compelled to clear out more land before morning in order to give them a chance to spread. - Newberg Graphic.

The Albany Herald a few nights ago criticised the Scio Fair Association for sending away for their premium lists. We wish to state for the benefit of the Herald that the job was offered to the local printing office but the funds of the Association were limited and the lowest bid in the county was $20 more than the job house asked, so we do not see why anyone need complain.

A gridiron of electric roads throughout the most fertile parts of the Willamette Valley, costing $8,000,000, is announced by the Southern Pacific. Yamhill, McMinnville, Corvallis, Alsea, Albany, Eugene, Molalla, Salem, Falls City, Canby, Aurora, Lebanon and many other points are to be reached by this new system of roads, which will develop the country reached as nothing else can. With these big improvements going on and the biggest crop in its history to be harvested the state has nothing to fear from the usual blighting effects on business of Presidential year.

The Moll.

In many of the portraits of the sixteenth century one often sees a strip of rich, soft fur wound around the wrist of a noble dame. This was used to cover the neck or fill the function of a muff, and to it was often attached a small animal's head or a skull eminently wrought in metal and adorned with precious stones. The first Venetian muffs were small, made of a single piece of velvet, broadside or silk lined with fur, the opening enriched with gold or silver buttons set with stones. By 1602 the muff seems to have been recognized as the necessary adjunct of the wardrobe of a woman of fashion.

A Nutritious Nut.

One of the most nutritious of nuts is that known as the "Queensland," a species of the quail nut.

of various hues, which are known as "belts." There are two principal belts, one on each side of the equator, and a varying number of smaller ones. Close around the poles there are no belts. Coloured changes in the form and colors of the belts are suggestive of the play of gigantic forces of transformation. It is often said, with apparent truth, that in Jupiter we behold a huge world issuing out of chaos. "Yes," observed Peary. "Indeed, indeed!" replied the other sorrowfully. "Did he, indeed? That was a cruel blow. That after a lifetime of untold esteem and of good work undertaken and carried through together we should be divided on so clear a question! Tell me, Mr. Hall - and here his mouth twitched, for he was evidently struggling with strong emotion - tell me, did you notice anything in the manner of my old friend which would lead you to believe that his reason was becoming in any way unbalanced?"

A Good Position.

Can be had by ambitious young men and ladies in the field of "Wireless" or Railroad telegraphy. Since the 8-hour law became effective, and since the Wireless companies are establishing stations throughout the country there is a great shortage of telegraphers. Positions pay beginners from $70 to $90 per month, with good chance for advancement. The National Telegraph Institute of Portland, Oregon, operates under supervision of R. R. and Wireless officials and places all graduates in positions. It will pay you to write them for full details.
