WOODROW WILSON'S OLD BELIEFS.

[New York Globe]

Back in 1894, long before he became infected with personal political ambition, Woodrow Wilson wrote essays, published in the Atlantic Monthly, that his enemies do not apparently care to quote. For example, there is one on Walter Bagehot in which the following passage occurs:

Moreover, there is a deeper lack in Bagehot. He has no sympathy with the voiceless body of the people, with the "mass of unknown men." He conceives the work of government to be a work which is possible only to the instructed few. He would have the masses served, and served with devotion, but he would not like to see them attempt to serve themselves. He has not the stout fiber and the unquestioning faith in the right and capacity of inorganic majorities which make the democrat. He has none of the heroic boldness necessary for faith in wholesale political aptitude and capacity. He takes democracy in detail in his thought, and to take it in detail makes it look very awkward indeed.

Woodrow Wilson is accused of being a "Federalist." It is charged that his present sympathy with democratic ideas is a pretense. He is accused of the meanness of changing his convictions in the hope of getting office.

It is doubtful whether American political history, full as it is of rackless slander, furnishes an instance of character assassination more contemptible than that of which Woodrow Wilson has been the victim.
