THE "GHOST" STAG.

A Lordly Brute That Bewildered the German Crown Prince.

In his interesting volume, "From My Hunting Day Book," the German crown prince, Friedrich Wilhelm, tells of a "ghost" stag. He "saw" the "ghost" on two different occasions. He says that he was so close to him that he could count every branch on his antlers with the naked eye. The prince sprang from his cart and fired point blank, but "My aim was all right, the herd scattered, and the stag simply disappeared. We could neither see nor find any trace of him."

The second occasion is described as follows: "I leaped out of the carriage and looked through the glass.
I undoubtedly recognized the splendid stag, the famous fourteen pointer! The herd began to move and made off through an alder wood to an adjoining meadow. The stag moved in their midst. The forester and I stalked them as quickly as possible, but they had already gone some distance.

"At last, in a small field, we saw the herd again. With infinite care we crept toward them and managed to get within possible range. The deer, however, were restless and moved to and fro uneasily round the border of the wood. There is scarcely light enough to shoot. In spite of that, after a most careful scrutiny through the glass, I take particular care, adjust the sights and fire. There is just enough light for me to see that the stag takes a great leap, then drops dead. The head forester and I excitedly shake hands. At last we have got the blessed brute!"

"After a quick run over the 300 yards of marshy meadow land we reach the spot, and there, to our incredible surprise and disillusionment, lies a poor wretched twelve pointer, killed by a beautifully clean shot. This was really going beyond a joke! I told the forester to his face that there was something wrong there. At this he found his tongue again and told me that for a long time there had been a legend among the neighboring huntmen of a splendid stag, at which many of them had shot, that was bewitched, and for which the fatal bullet had not been cast.

"Well, I am not superstitious, but I must say I am inclined to think there was certainly something uncanny about this stag. We still call him the ghost stag, and I do not believe I shall ever get another shot at him."

Symptom of Recovery.

A doctor who had been attending an old farmer for a fortnight or so pronounced the patient so much improved that it would be unnecessary for him to call again professionally.
Next day the medico was not a little astonished to find the ex-patient in the surgery with a half consumed bottle of medicine in his hand. "I thought, doctor, as you said that I was all right again that I needn't finish the bottle, so I've brought it back, as it'll happen come in handy for some other badly (sick) body that's got the same complaint as I had. And you'll likely knock something off my bill, seeing that I've only sipped half of it." Thus showing a shrewd, saving turn on the convalescent's part. — Chambers Journal.

Turned Back the Compliment.

Harry Lauder, the Scotch comedian, tells a story of an English nobleman.

"His lordship was introduced to me at the Tivoli one night," so the story begins. "He asked me to dine with him. I accepted, and then he hesitated and said:

"I don't mean dine at my home, you know. My wife doesn't approve of—er—music hall people, you know. I mean dine at my club."
"At your club?" said I, with a horrified look. "Oh, no! No, thank you, my lord. I'm sorry to have to decline, but the fact is, you know, my wife doesn't—er—approve of clubmen."

A Timely Warning.

Mr. H. was recently presented with a handsome revolver, whose qualities he was testing by firing blank cartridges into the air, when his young son, Natalie, aged six, appeared upon the scene. "Oh, papa," she cried in great distress, "don't shoot at the sky; you might kill an angel!"
