Valentine Dinner

School Dist No 76 known as Oak View school, gave R H McDonald and pupils a surprise dinner at the school house at noon Monday. The children were next to the surprise and went out to play while Mr McDonald was busily engaged in eating his dinner when about fifty neighbors and friends came marching in with full baskets, boxes and buckets. Mr Mc was much surprised judging from the expression on his face, as was also one of his little pupils who said to one of the ladies, "My mama does not know anything about this," but later found she was right there with a big basket filled with good eats.

After dinner some interesting talks were given by some of the older people who have have seen the school grow from generation to generation. Mr McDonald also gave an interesting talk, considering the shock he received by having such a spread put before him. After this a box of 200 valentines was distributed among the pupils.

Mr McDonald takes a great interest in his pupils, and his scholars all enjoy his teathing. The patrons felt it their duty to show that the interest he is taking is appreciated.

Now I have always heard that Oak View school house stood just on the point of Hungry Hill, but just let me say that if you could have seen that spread you would have changed your mind. When the patrons took their departure for home, all wished Mr McDonald and his school many happy returns.

One Who was There.

Ancient Relics

Will Abbott is proudly exhibiting some curiosities this week which were presented to him by Mrs H B Iler. One is a bullet from the battlefield of Custer, which looks as though it would be capable of making a good Indian out of poor Lo. The rest of the collection consists of hexagon shaped stones with small cubes cemented on either side. These are Indian relics taken from the old mounds of Oklahoma, and are supposed to have been used as money among the Mound Builders, although this is conjecture, as the oldest Indians have no knowledge of them.
