State Fair Board in a Mess

The state fair board Tuesday at Salem made a change in the secretaryship electing A. H. Lea, of Portland, to succeed W. L. Jones. J. H. Booth, of Roseburg and N. E. West, of LaGrande, resigned and the governor immediately appointed A. C. Masters, of Roseburg and J. E. Reynolds, of La Grande. Will Hogg, live stock superintendent, also resigned. Bitter feeling is said to prevail over the result.

500,000 Guns Available

Washington, Jan. 18.—Quarter-master General Aleshire told the House military committee today that equipment for an army of 500,000 men was either in the government storehouses or can be bought in the open market in less than three months. Equipment for 500,000 is in army or militia deposits; and manufacturing concerns, the general said, could easily turn out equipment for 300,000 in 90 days.

Select Dancing Club

There has always been objections to general public dances, by many of our citizens, because of almost invariable presence of rough and boisterous persons. Many persons have denied themselves the pleasure of the dance on this account. They were unwilling to mix and mingle with people in the ball room whom they could not meet socially elsewhere.

The K. of P. band of this city has overcome this objection by organizing a dancing club. Only persons who are of good moral character and who have respectable standing in the community, are permitted to buy cards of admission. The boys have certain rules and regulations of conduct when in the ball room.

The boys are furnishing high class music and the order maintained is of the same quality you have in your parlors at home. The dances are given every two weeks and are deserving of patronage.

other morning to hear of the death of Walker McNabb the night before at the home of his niece, Mrs. J. Lee, one mile west of town. Heart failure is the supposed cause of his death, as he was in his usual health when he retired, and no indications of suffering was found in his lifeless body when they called him to get up. They called several times and no answer, then they went to see and found him cold in death. Mr. McNabb has lived in this part of the country for about 25 years. He was one of the first members of the grange at Holley. For several years his wish was for the grange to bury him. The grange took charge of the body and buried it in the Crawfordville cemetery. D. C. Swan and C. L. Malone officiating at the funeral.

FOODS THE TURKS EAT.

Pilaff is the National Dish, and but Little Meat is Used.

Vegetables, fruits and grains are the staples of the Turkish kitchen. Breakfast on the Bosphorus consists of a small cup of Turkish coffee and a roll. At noon there is a bowl of sour milk (yogurt) and bread. Thick Turkish coffee is taken again in the afternoon to keep up appetites for the principal meal, which comes at night. This meal includes, probably, pilaff (meat and rice), several kinds of vegetables, pastry and thick coffee. The workman's meal is still more simple—a chunk of bread and an onion or a bunch of grapes.

There are, however, some dishes upon the Turkish bill of fare which the returned westerner never ceases to regret. Pilaff is one. It is a food as national with the Turk as the potato with the Irish, as the cabbage with the German. It takes a multitude of forms, but its basic quality, its quality of being pilaff, is derived from rice being cooked in such a way as to preserve each grain firm and distinct. The rice is unpolished and in cooking takes on a gelatinous coat. Sometimes it is boiled in mutton fat, a rich, smooth, inviting dish. Sometimes bits of roast mutton are mingled with it, when it becomes a meat pudding of delicious flavor. It is cooked with small currants and pine nuts, fragrant and spicy. It is stuffed with dates and flavored with orange peel; but, whatever its form, it is one of the treasured memories of a visit to the near east.

Eggplant is the foundation of another favored Turkish dish. It is stuffed with chopped onions and rice and cooked in oil. It is also stuffed with meat marrows and rice and steamed until it becomes a culinary inspiration. The westerner, furthermore, learns to enjoy many of the milk foods prepared by the Turks. Yogurt, cultured milk as thick as sour cream, prepared from the rich milk of the buffalo cow, is a satisfaction to the most pampered diner. Chicken breast milk, made from grated chicken breasts; jelly-like rice milk, starchy pudding, eaten with sugar and rosewater and yogurt, with chopped nutmeats, are other dishes.

The Turks are fond of sweets. They prepare a kind of bread which they soak in honey and eat with rich cream. They also prepare pastry in strings soaked in honey. Meats, with the exception of mutton, are poor in Turkey, but then the Turk is a good deal of a vegetarian.

The Turkish porter, or hamal, dines on a chunk of bread costing a cent, together with a melon or a bunch of grapes or an onion or a piece of cheese, to the cost of another cent, and considers his meal complete. Yet his daily toll consists in carrying packing cases, pianos and other knickknacks around on his back to the astonishment of every visitor acquainted only with the prowess of porters in the west. This rugged Turkish burden bearer eats a dinner at night which costs about 4 cents—a bowl of pilaff with bits of meat in it.—National Geographic Society Bulletin.
