A Tire Episode

A few days ago Fred Jones went to the F. T. Bilyeu garage, where he stores his car, and there found that some one had jacked up a wheel and removed the tire. Ascertaining that Mr. Bilyeu, the owner and manager of the garage, knew nothing of the tire's removal, and being unable to locate the tire about the shop, a campaign of sleuthing on the part of both Bilyeu and Jones was instituted. Every car that moved along the street was scanned to, if possible, locate the missing tire. Saturday the quest proved successful. The tire was located on a machine which belongs a short distance from Scio. It was of the make of the lost tire, and upon closer examination, was found to bear the number of the lost tire.

Fred Jones wanted his property and warned the owner not to take the car from town. The tire thief was soon located. A young man, not the owner, had permission to use this same car occasionally. A few days previous this young man was driving the car and must have had a puncture in one of his tires.

He entered the Bilyeu garage during the still hours of the night and removed the tire from the Jones machine, as above stated. Why he did not take a new tire, of which there was a plenty, thus avoiding the trouble of removing the tire from another wheel, is not stated.

When it was clear who had taken the tire, everybody got busy. The young man who obtained the tire surreptitiously, belongs to a well respected family and, as this was his first offense of this character, it was concluded to let the matter rest in secrecy, providing all damages was made good, which the interested parties seemed glad to do. As the matter stands, this young man who sought to obtain an automobile tire for nothing, in the end paid the price of two or three tires for it, yet did not obtain the tire. It is far easier to buy a tire, legitimately, from the dealer and, besides, securing the name of "thief," which will require this young man years to live down.

Mrs. W. A. Ewing had the misfortune of accidentally stumbling down the stairs Monday afternoon, resulting in a sprained wrist and badly bruised body.

Munkere of Scio, and Ed Woodmansee of Wren, for the last three weeks, have gone to Raymond, Wash., to visit other relatives and from where they will continue their trip to San Francisco, before returning to their home at Bieber, California.
