In our bank robbery story of last week we stated the bank vault was "flimsy" in construction. We simply meant it is flimsy as against robber resistance and not when attacked by fire. Robbers can go through a brick wall in short order, when the same wall is a safe protection against fire, which is all the structure was intended to be. The manganese steel safe is another matter.

Last Sunday the weather clerk evidently tried to give us a sample of all variety of weather he had in stock, except freezing. Snow, rain, thunder, lightning, hail, sunshine and wind. As a specimen of a real March day it was a success.
