WHY is it necessary to continue to stir up hatred for and enmity to Portland by a considerable number of our down state papers? It is quite probable we would be seriously handicapped for markets if it were not for Portland. We admire Portland's business men for initiating a world's fair for Oregon and hope they can make good.

THERE is every sign for a return to prosperity in a slow but steady process, and many communities are making ready for it. Plants are being overhauled and repairs being made for the early spring and summer business that is coming. The community with a live civic club is to be envied, for it will reap greater benefits than the unprepared community. Scio should have a live, wide-awake civic club. Now is the time to organize. Don't wait.

THE OPEN FORUM

In nearly every paper in every community will be found a column where the people can give expression to things that are needing attention as they see it and as it affects them. This paper recently opened its columns to its readers, and it has been used exclusively to chastising the merchants, and if what has been said is true, or even a half truth, they deserve it.

We are glad this discussion has taken place, because if there is a tendency to hold up prices on commodities while wages and produce are going down, these unfair practices will be stopped and a correct readjustment made. We hold no brief for either side, but from what we have now learned about the situation we feel that the patrons adjacent to Scio are about as much to blame as the merchants for the trade slipping away from Scio and going elsewhere.

The lack of cooperation is probably the cause of all this misunderstanding. No one stands alone nor makes a success of his business or his farm when he alone is the sole consumer of his wares—there must be an exchange. When this exchange takes place between grower and merchant, then a community of interests springs up that benefits both, and soon the circle spreads to include all the inhabitants in that community and it becomes prosperous—that's cooperation.

Now let us see how it works out when we want to be independent. A has chickens and eggs; B has vegetables and fruit; C is a merchant, and D is a laboring man. A brings in his eggs, gathered at random, and expects the top market price; the merchant pays in trade, but usually cash is requested, and the merchant loses in either case when the eggs are candled, or sold as they are. B brings in his vegetables or berries and also gets the cash. C is the merchant who is the goat in a small community and is loser in either case because of shrinkage and spoilage. The two former take the money that belongs here to another city and purchases goods that they should buy here (the city merchant never taking their produce) and the laborer, D, goes without work. It entails a hardship on the community, for that money goes out never to return. The city merchant extends no credit when it is needed, is not sympathetic when sickness overtakes you, and when you have no money he cannot recognize you.

We may pay a little more here for the necessities of life at times, but the local price will average very close to the city price during the year. The local merchant makes good defective purchases, while you must take your purchase as it looks from the city. Keep Scio money in Scio, and more clerks will be needed to take care of the trade, more help will be required in other lines, and more houses will be in demand. To send your money away is industrial suicide. Cooperation builds better farm and city homes, better schools and churches, makes for a community pride and a happy, contented people. Let's cooperate and pull together, not apart.

Next week we will begin a statement by J. F. Wesely, and as it is quite lengthy, it will be continued from week to week until completed. It is of immense interest and truthfully portrays the trials and tribulations of a country merchant. Our readers will watch for it, and those who are not readers should subscribe and get the whole series—this article is worth a whole year's subscription, $1.75.

High School Notes

January 17

We are at last able to breathe more freely. After four days of anxiety and excitement, school work is back to normalcy. In spite of hard questions and other disadvantages, no one has been reported on the casualty list, and everyone is ready to begin the new semester in earnest.

Mr. Williamson and Mr. McCart met with the members of the sheep and goat clubs at the high school auditorium last Thursday. The school is represented in these two clubs by John Scott, Arnold Zysset and Kenneth Westenhause in the goat club, and John Scott, Millard and Donald Shelton in the sheep club. The Corvallis girls played a very interesting game here with the Scio girls last Friday evening. The score was "nip and tuck" until the last few minutes, ending in a score of 12 to 18. While waiting for the Corvallis team to arrive, the boys staged a practice game, the score being 24 to 21 in favor of the "Reds." A reception followed the game. Those who attended report an enjoyable evening.

A Student Body meeting will be held this Friday to elect new officers for the semester. Scio debating team will debate Feb. 3d against the Stayton debating team. Those in Scio's team are: Mary Shimanek, Maurice White and Dellares Sutherland, for the affirmative; John Densmore, Ethel Zysset and Tommy Small for the negative.

Inability of the referee to see fouls caused the second game between Scio and the Willamette freshmen to terminate into a melee in which the strangle hold and brass knuckles were the only things barred. That is the way college basketball is played, but matured men play on the college teams, while high school teams are composed of younger fellows who cannot stand the fast and rough pace set by their older opponents. The small floor is another bad factor causing rough playing. The score at the end of the first half stood 18 to 0 in favor of Scio, and only after a substitution and change in lineup were the freshmen able to score. Thus they made the total of 8 points, when Scio's first string went on the floor and held the visitors to two points in the last 10 minutes of play. Willamette used all their sub in the last half in an attempt to stop the offensive of the Scio team. The low ceiling and small floor hampered the progress of both teams.

The school gymnasium work is not going as well as had been hoped. The
