"Knock"

Rev. Dinkenspell gives the readers of the Tribune a sermon on "knock."

My beloved brothers and sisters another Lord's day morning has come, since you read my sermon on worms, a similitude of life in our struggle for existence. We come to you to day, and ask you, how is your knock?

Possibly brethren, you have never thought much about this little word woven into the warp and woof of your life and mine. The word means a sound, an unusual noise, an awakening of the senses, conveyed to our hearing when machinery and the mechanism of our physical organism are not running smoothly, and forthwith, we run our machine into the garage, on doctors office for repairs, something is wrong; the the knock must be removed.

Knock, the little signal that causes us to seek out and find the remedy if we can. We now call your attention to a passage in holy writ, which reads. "knock and it shall be opened unto you." Here we get a broader view of this little word that signifies the method of finding the remedy—"It will be opened unto you." It knocked the latch off the door, to God's great store house of knowledge, and says "walk in and seek what ye can find," and "knowledge shall fill the earth, as the waters of the mighty deep." See how it has led man to all his achievements. It led Dr. Harvey to the discovery of the circulation of the blood, it led Columbus to prove our world was round, by sailing around it.

It has led all the great minds of the world in their onward march, into the unlocking of these marvelous things we see and hear all around us, and we thank God, for the knock that opens these things to the mental concept of man, and brings us in closer touch with the I AM.

"For ye shall be as Gods"—"Knock and it shall be opened." "Seek and ye shall find," has brought us out of darkness into light, and has given us the telegraph, the telephone, the wireless and radio, and if we but hold our ballast, we will yet be hitched to the stars and walk the milky way and talk with those on other planets where there is as much reason to believe there is life and intelligence as there is on this little ball, that is only one among the billions of others. It seems unreasonable to believe that this is the only little planet among all the others where life exists.

In conclusion my beloved friends let us all knock, earnestly, honestly and sincerely for higher and better things and God will open his wondrous ways to men, only as he seeks to find, and know them. Amen.

Our next will be "Knocker."

A Drawing Card

A lady and small daughter from the country entered a Novelty Store, the low almost gruff voice said "something," on being told by the lady they were looking about for a few Xmas articles, and waiting for a friend whom by appointment they had agreed to meet there.

The two clerks chatted away with each other or made pretense of arranging small boxes or whatever it might of been, all the while perfectly oblivious to the presence of the shoppers. Finally the small daughter picked up a toy as she said "mamma buy this for me it is ten cents."

No recognition from either clerk, one being busily manicuring his finger nails while the other wiped the dust off the store mirror. After remaining some moments looking over and admiring the various goods on the various counters, the lady decided this must be a sort of day off at the place, and to give assurance of their presence inquired the location of the new department store?

The spokesman of the two gloomily answered, "It's a block down the street."

At this the shoppers passed out not to be seen or heard again in this particular store. As grunts for answers and suspicious side glances which almost audibly said "If you cant purchase at once get out."

Explains Salmon's Jump.

The bureau of fisheries says that at the bottom of a fall there is usually a very deep well. The salmon swim to the extreme bottom of this well, and if they have sufficient depth of water to give force to get the power to jump, they do so by swimming very fast and rushing out. This force mechanically causes them to jump the falls.

Area and Coast Line of Brazil.

The total area of Brazil is estimated at 3,391,250 square miles. It has 4,000 miles of coast line, with many harbors, and the Amazon river system, which enables ocean going steamers to travel inland for 3,000 miles.
