National Garden Week

National garden week will be April 2-7 in Oregon this year. It will be held under the auspices of State Federation of Women's Clubs, Mrs. Ida B. Callahan, president.

The date and activities were arranged with Paul V. Maris, director of O. A. C. extension, who, with his staff of specialists, the county and home demonstration agents and the young peoples' garden clubs, will help carry out the work.

A reissue of the farm garden vegetable bulletin by A. G. Bouquet, head of vegetable gardening at the college will be one feature of the week, the first issue having been exhausted.

To help the home gardeners select helpful books on the care and use of the garden, Lucy M. Lewis, college librarian, has prepared a list to be mailed out to the rural newspapers who are willing to cooperate in spreading the gospel of good gardening.

Special items on the relation of the home garden to the family diet will be prepared by Margery Smith, college nutrition specialist, and distributed by specialists, county agents and farm and city press.

A good garden is regarded as an addition to the health, wealth and pleasure of both rural and town homes.

National garden week as endorsed by President Harding is April 16-21, but the coast region is two weeks ahead of the rest of the country and calls for earlier observance.

Governor Walter M. Pierce has been asked to aid in the movement by proclamation or otherwise as he sees fit.

Attended Editorial Meeting

terest with each succeeding meeting, and this one was the largest attended of any thus far. Many splendid papers were read tending to bring the high calling of the papers of the state to a broader plane and a more cohesive understanding. The annual meeting of the newspapermen will be held at Hood River in July, and a climb up Mt. Hood is planned at the close of the business session. The American Legion is sponsoring the climb.

Rooster Refuses Feed

Watch the male bird during the breeding season. It is not uncommon to find a male bird losing flesh and remaining in poor condition because of his anxiety to see that his flock have plenty to eat before he himself will eat. Either give him an extra feed at night or nail a can on the side of the wall out of reach of the hens but from which the male bird will feed.

O. A. C. Farm Reminders

Thorough cleaning of seed wheat, seed oats or seed barley to get rid of wild oats and other weed seed gives a cleaner and better crop, more bushels to the acre and less dockage when the grain is sold.

Now is the time to collect your scion wood for grafting. With the approach of spring weather trees come quickly into activity and begin to use up the stored food materials. For this reason scion wood selected while the trees are dormant produce better results.

That general purpose hens should be mated one male to 15 hens and leghorns or egg types mated one male to 20 hens is generally recommended. These figures are about right for individual matings but if a large flock is to be mated, the number of hens to one male bird may be increased 20 per cent.
