The Horse Coming Back

The predictors of the horseless age lost sight of the fact that there is another element to reckon with, besides the one of the mere usefulness of the horse. Human gratitude for that long career of service, without which civilization would not have made its present strides, has created a bond of attachment between man and the horse that will not be easily broken. The time when man first discovered the docile and tractable qualities of the horse is not known. Although the ox, as a domestic work animal, is doubtless of greater age, the horse was known as a military aid, first for cavalry and later for chariot use, nearly as long as written records of history extend. In the wars between Persia, Egypt and Greece the side was often victorious that had the most and the best horses. The steed of the Arab is a classic of primitive romance. Those nations that made the best use of the horse made the most rapid progress in the evolution of culture.

Ready to Meet Winter

When winter comes it will find youth equipped for a frolic with it. Innumerable sweaters, jackets, scarfs and caps of warm wool have "sports" written in every stitch of their cozy texture and in their glowing colors. Here is a matched set—jacket, scarf and cap of angora—in two colors (the scarf finished with yarn fringe).
