Hall's Catarrh Medicine

Those who are in a "run-down" condition will notice that Catarrh bothers them much more than when they are in good health. This fact proves that while Catarrh is a local disease, it is greatly influenced by constitutional conditions.

HALL'S CATARRH MEDICINE is a Combined Treatment, both local and internal, and has been successful in the treatment of Catarrh for over forty years. Sold by all druggists.

THURSDAY, Jan. 8, 1925

Blessed are the righteous, for they do not litter up the front page.

Congratulate the farmer if he has made a few extra pennies the past year. He had it coming.

The Brownsville Times has enlarged to a 7-column paper and also shows other marked improvements. Success to it.

That bridge at Albany is hanging in the air. Judge McMahan has ruled that the state highway commission has no right to build the bridge at Ellsworth street, and a permanent injunction will be asked. What the future holds, no one can tell. A bridge is costly, besides people don't have to cross a river, and if they do they can swim.

The new county officers were inducted into office Monday. Wonder if the old ones will outdo their former efforts and if the new ones will be an improvement over the ones they replaced. Each has a splendid opportunity, but time alone will tell. Here's well wishes to all for a successful term, and to those who go off the county payroll we extend our best wishes for their success in any undertaking they may choose.

Whether or not we want to forget there is a gymnasium on school property, the debt thereon will not let us. Who the building belongs to and who is the final paymaster, are also questions that won't let the gym be forgotten. These questions must sooner or later be answered as well as the debt be paid. A partial solution may be offered tonight at the Parent-Teacher meeting. Every patron and taxpayer is interested in this and should attend.

The Coos Bay Times, published in Marshfield, issued a combined booster and Christmas edition, which was liberally patronized by the business men and enterprises in that section of Oregon. The edition was in nine sections of eight pages each and the stories and news told of the opportunities to be found in the Coos Bay country. Such loyalty on the part of the businesses of Marshfield is to be commended, as well as the progressiveness of the publishers.

A revival of the exposition idea is now being sought, and opinions are in its favor. Expositions are one of the best methods known to attract the attention of the people of the world to the city and state in which it is held, and is therefore a good thing. Oregon has as much, yes more, to offer the public than any other state to homeseekers, enterprises, etc., and an exposition will attract these and thousands of others to our state. Let's have it.

What is the "Unpardonable Sin" in all Nature? What one thing most inevitably brings its own punishment? What most surely spells extinction?

STAGNATION—standing still!
The Gigantosaurus, that was over a 100 feet long and as big as a house; the Tyrannosaurus, that had the strength of a locomotive and was the last word in frightfulness; the Pterodactyl or Flying Dragon—all the giant monsters of prehistoric ages—are gone. They did not know how to meet the changing conditions. They stood still while the life about them passed them by.—Review of Reviews.

The editor has a new nickname, whether in derision or as a compliment, he does not know. If the sobriquet is intended to convey the impression that the editor has the traits of the bird we are called—magpie—and is a thief and a vandal, then it is a serious nickname and might possibly cost the inventor of the sobriquet a considerable sum of money, if he is worth it. But if intended to imply that he is a booster for his community and sounds the clarion that his community, the farmer and his farm and the business man and his business are the best anywhere, then we accept the nickname as a compliment, for the magpie is a bird that keeps his flock together doing the same thing.

Answers to the Tribune's question as to news and editorial policy resulted in six answers only. One said "agricultural suggestions," another said "I prefer editor's candid opinion on local matters and such news as he may secure," another said "local news and country correspondence," another said "this is the second paper I have seen and can not answer your question," while two said "good enough as is." We thank our friends for the interest taken and assure them the question was answered satisfactorily and we will try to give them and our hundreds of other readers all the news we can get, and also take positive stands on local problems as they occur. Again, we appreciate the suggestions and thank you for them. We hope to be a positive factor in making this the best community to live in, and in bringing new industries to help make more payrolls so more people will buy the products of the farm.

PEOPLE'S COLUMN

INTOLERANCE

Editor Tribune:

There is much being said nowadays in the press, and common parlance, about intolerance, and I have wondered where it begins and where it ends. We got the dictionary to find its definition, but it don't seem to give the specific meaning in which the word is used today. I believe there is a better definition than the dictionary defines. I would define it thus: The ruling class can print, say or put over anything they want to, but the rest of us must keep our mouths shut. To my mind it is rather a bad word in the English language, and carries the idea of Boss in it. And yet, I don't see how we are going to eliminate it, because when we get down to its beginning it starts in the home. As long as things run smoothly, and no friction anywhere, we are tolerant, but when things occur that molest the peace and quietude in the home, then we must manifest and enforce a spirit of intolerance and be boss. So in tracing it all down the line, it becomes the prime factor in the enforcement of law and order.

An editor wants to air his views on some subject in the columns of his paper, or mentions some little episode happening in the community. Intolerance raises up on its hind legs and a subscriber shouts "Stop My Paper!" A man may want a little moonshine or wine for his stomach's sake, or his oft infirmities; Intolerance says no, you can't have it, sell it, make it or drink it, we will fine you if you do. Some will say we don't want any religion but Baptist religion, all others ought to be prohibited. A big boy or girl in school will say, I'm not going to obey the rules and regulations given by the teacher, and the spirit of intolerance must be exercised in order to have the proper discipline in the school.

So when we come to think of it, I doubt if any of us are free from being contaminated with that ugly word intolerance. It crucified Christ, burnt people at the stake, destroyed homes, and has played hell in the world generally. It stands with its back against that nobler word, Tolerance, and between the two words there is a constant warfare in action. When we all become tolerant toward each other, in religion, politics, business, and to each other's ideas and opinions, though differing from our own possibly, the world will move up a pace and the brotherhood of man be more universally assimilated. There will always be disagreement in the world, few questions but what have two sides, and why should either side become intolerant of the other's views? Be tolerant, investigate, and we might get together.

"Thou shalt, and thou shalt not," is the pinnacle from which intolerance was flung, and we can trace it through all the world's history, past and present. Almost in any kind of meeting, be it political, religious, social (whatever it might be), if some one gets up and rubs the fur in the opposite direction, the cry of "radical" rings out, and intolerance sways the multitude—"I am for intolerance, let me have my way, but you keep your mouth shut. I'll do the talking and thinking, but don't you dare open your bazoo, or think anything contrary to my standard."

I don't think there has ever lived on this earth a person whose ego has not been and is saturated with the spirit of intolerance. God himself seems to have possessed it, in sending a flood and drowning the people because they were so wicked. Christ manifested the spirit of it when he drove the gamblers out of temple in Jerusalem. Oh, naughty, naughty word, and disposition that accompanies it. A READER.
