

Memories

By O. Lawrence Hawthorne

Too seldom do we sit and dream
Of days forever gone;
We miss the charm of evening,
Impatient for the dawn;
And when the morning is at hand
We yearn for eventide;
So many of the moment's joys
Our hearts are thus denied.
God made each hour of every day
A time for happiness—
The future offers pleasure but
The present holds no less.

A moment's retrospection when
The daily task is done,
A brief exchange of memories,
Recounting one by one
Those mutual enjoyments that
Were most important then—
Those sacred little incidents
That never come again—
Such season of reflection brings
The keenest ecstasy;
A wealth of precious treasure fills
The realms of memory.
