

A Trip to Cuba
on the way back and you never saw so many kids in your life. At one but a baby had just died and they were holding a wake and two men were so drunk and going up and down the (no streets) but between the houses singing and hollering. We didn't stay there very long.

There are two distinct factions in this country, the Reds and the Blues, and they are always fighting. Just now the Blues are in power having had a big revolution about 15 months ago, burned a lot of the town, killed about 3,000 people in all, but only about 275 right in Ceiba. The company has about six blocks walled in and when these revolutions come on the people all rush there and eat, sleep and live there until it is over. These soldiers, lots of them boys not over 15, walk about the streets as thick as flies with guns and a big knife about 2½ feet long and sharp as a razor. They call it a machette. They don't hesitate to use it either.

The Reds decided to try and take the town while we were there. We were all rushed aboard ship and taken about two miles out to sea and anchored where no stray bullets could reach us. The army officers and activities were centered right at the end of the wharf, so we had a fine grand stand seat. The Blues went out and chased the Reds back, but they had captured five engines, two or three trains of bananas, burned a bridge and captured a Blue officer and cut his head off. The company kept us out in the sea two days, then they let us come up to the wharf and load bananas, 41,700 bunches all green as grass, was 210 car loads. You can't imagine what a sight it was to see them load the ship, natives by the dozens. They loaded all those on between 7 a. m. and 11. They have machinery to help but every bunch has to be carried to the machine and into place after they are in the ship.

Everyone was afraid the ship would be commandeered to haul those dirty troops, many in rags and tags and more barefooted than had shoes on.

Had a very rough sea part of the way. Nearly every one was sick. Paul and I never missed a meal. Dick had to miss lunch one day.

It is smooth now as we near the mouth of the Mississippi river. We will be in New Orleans in the early morning, and I think we will go right on to Kansas City. I will be glad to get home, as usual. It was very warm down there and we are all black as crows.

When we reached Ceiba they found three Austrian men stowaways and they were almost dead; had not eaten for five days. They put them off there. Of course they were trying to make it into the United States.

It is not unusual for girls of 12 or 13 to be mothers of two or three children. All take the mother's name as they do not know the father's. The old pilot told me of a woman he knew well who is 37 and has had 29 children, and only two pairs of twins. They are considered old at 35 and do not live to be over 35 or 40.

Mistakes at Different Values

When the plumber makes a mistake he charges for it.

When a lawyer makes a mistake it is just what he wanted, because he has a chance to try the case all over again.

When a carpenter makes a mistake it's just what he expected.

When a doctor makes a mistake he buries it.

When a judge makes a mistake it becomes the law of the land.

When a preacher makes a mistake nobody knows the difference.

But when a printer makes a mistake—Good night!—Inland Printer.
