No, there will be nothing serious from the small tremors occurring occasionally in Oregon. They only occur when Gov. Walter Pierce suddenly drops one of his appointees.

Leonard Gilkey has been named manager of the Linn County Fair for this year, and we congratulate the management upon their selection. Leonard is a born genius for fairs, and if they can be made a success, he can do it.

The Aumsville Star says some nice things of Sen. Stanfield, one of which is calling him the sheep king. Why refer to this "king" stuff? Sheep men can't elect him and the rest of us won't. Oregon needs two senators on the job, and Bob has rarely been there.

The Jersey cattle breeders are to hold a show at the fair grounds in Albany on Saturday, May 23, and it is expected every breeder will have his best on display. Of course, he or she will be dressed fit to kill and made to look her finest on that day. Anyway, the cattle are almost human and are good money makers for their owners.

If a dealer buys on a rising market and prices take a decided slump, the dealer loses and we chuckle over his loss. If the dealer buys on a low market and prices take a sudden jump, then we say the dealer is crooked and he knew the price was going up. Humanity never seems happier than when it can gloat over some one else's loss or we can call some one crooked.

Loss of Manure on Dairy Farms

It has been claimed that the annual value of the manure from a cow is equal to the feeding value of the skim milk produced by her. But judging from the way these two products are handled on the average farm, the skim milk must be considered of much greater value, for the reason that little of this is allowed to go to waste, while, according to statistics, nearly one-half of the value of the manure is lost on the average farm, says a writer in the Indiana Farmers' Guide. It is evident that on many farms the real value of manure is not fully understood, and that there is much lack of knowledge concerning the best methods of handling it so as to get its full value.

Liquid is Richest.

The urine, as a rule, is much richer in fertilizing constituents than the dung, containing more than half the nitrogen voided by the animal, hence, all of this portion of the voidings possible should be saved, and to do this it is necessary in the first place to have water-tight gutters and floors, made with cement. The next requirement is a sufficient amount of clean, porous bedding, such as will absorb practically all of the liquid. Straw and cut corn-stalks make good bedding material and hold a great deal of liquid. Powdered absorbents, such as ground phosphate rock, has also been used as an absorbent, and this material not only absorbs moisture, but also holds in the ammonia being liberated from the manure.

Half of Value Lost.

Where no precautions are taken against leaching and fermentation, more than one-half the value of the manure may be lost. Bacterial action also causes more or less loss. It has been proved by experience that manure placed in a pile in the usual way will lose nearly one-half of its value when exposed to the weather for five or six months. Every rain washes a certain percentage of the soluble matter away. Losses from leaching may be entirely avoided by placing the manure in a shallow concrete pit provided with a roof. No farmer can afford to be without a covered storage for manure.

If the manure can be hauled out as soon as produced and spread on the ground where there is no danger of its being washed away, this is the most economical way. But on many farms the lay of the land is such that quite a large per cent of the manure will be lost by washing during the winter and spring season.

Pays to Fatten Poultry Before Birds Are Sold

The finisher of poultry cannot remain in business unless he can make some profit, and the farm poultry raiser needs the finisher. It is estimated that at least one-half of the poultry sold off the farm is fattened at feeding stations before it reaches the market. The market will not take poultry in the condition of flesh in which most of it leaves the farm. Farmers may not generally appreciate this, but such is the case. The fact is that farmers should pen-feed their cull hens and pullets before attempting to sell them, because they can do so at a good profit, even with the present high price of corn. Farmers may not be in a position to crate-feed, but this is not necessary when done on a small scale on the farm. Pen-feeding will give practically as good results as crate-feeding on the farm, but birds cannot be profitably fattened unless their range is greatly restricted. To fatten the birds while they are running at large is a losing proposition. Under such conditions they run off the flesh about as fast as they lay it on.

Not Really Profanity

It is perfectly correct when you say that "damn" got into bad company and took some of the color of "damn." But what is the origin of the word? "Damn" is not an intensive adjective meaning "very most," as you assume, but is an offspring of the Shakespearean word "dearn, dern" which signified "terrible," originally "darkened, soiled." A cognate verb is "tarnish" (to soil).—New York Herald Tribune.
