THINGS UNUSUAL

By T. T. MAXEY

THE CALIFORNIA MISSIONS

Scattered up and down the coast of California—each one day's journey on horseback apart from the next—are a chain of twenty-one great Spanish missions, which stand as a monument everlasting to the credit of the Franciscan Fathers.

Connected by a historic trail known as "El Camino Real" (The King's Highway), approximately 700 miles in length—extending from San Diego northward to Sonoma, these romantic and picturesque buildings—Moorish in architecture—might well be classed as "The American counterpart of the things that people go to the old countries of Europe to see."

These famous missions are a relic of a romantic and yet fearless endeavor, carried on by the Franciscan missionaries, at the command of the king of Spain to establish through a series of religious outposts a knowledge of Christianity in her farthestmost possession. The movement took definite form when the Mission San Diego was founded in the year 1769, but the chain was not completed until 54 years later when the Mission San Francisco de Solano at Sonoma was established.

How many additional missions might have been added to this chain and how much farther up the coast it would have been extended, nobody knows, because before the advent of 1824 the system was disrupted and further construction stopped by the government of Mexico. However, this labor of love then had to its credit the civilizing and the Christianizing of a race of savage Indians.

Some of these missions now lie in ruins or have passed entirely into oblivion. Others, in a splendid state of preservation, are still used for regular service. The San Jose, fifty miles south of San Francisco, although not to be compared in size or cost to some others, has been accorded marked attention. It once owned more than 25,000 head of live stock. The San Antonio de Padua, east of San Luis Obispo, was compensated for its lack of riches by a tinge of romance such as few, if indeed any of the others, possessed. San Gabriel, four miles from Pasadena, much visited, has been described as "a picture to remember for a lifetime." San Buenaventura, north of Los Angeles, a "glorious relic recalled from the past to bless with its memories the present and the future," had perhaps the most beautiful altar of all, while San Luis Rey de Francia, near Oceanside, with walls four and five feet thick, its corridor containing 250 arches, was perhaps the greatest, richest and grandest of them all.

Any girl in trouble may communicate with Ensign Lee of the Salvation Army at the White Shield Home, 565 Mayfair Ave., Portland, Oregon.
