HOW TO SAVE MONEY WHEN SHOPPING

By MRS. HARLAND H. ALLEN

WHY PATENT LEATHER CRACKS

"Will this patent leather crack?" is perhaps the one question heard oftener than any other from women shoppers in the shoe stores.

The handsome, glossy, black, smooth surface characteristic of patent leather, is made by treating dry, softened skins with successive coats of varnish, and baking after each application of varnish. Large, thin, firm hides are generally selected in the first place. Each of the coatings made of gums and vegetable oils are worked into the fiber, and thoroughly dried, before the next is given. The last coat is applied with a brush, and the leather baked for three days in an oven at a low temperature, and then finally exposed to the sunlight, which oxidizes the varnish, and gives the finish.

When the customer begins to wear the shoe, and the leather expands, as it frequently does when affected by the warmth and moisture of the foot, the coating of varnish, which is inelastic, and cannot expand with the leather, may crack. No manufacturer can tell whether the leather is going to crack or not, and for that reason it is seldom guaranteed. It does, however, frequently give good service. The finish is a very popular one, being especially suitable for semi-dress wear, but appropriate for almost any other occasion as well. This handsome leather brings out the lines of the shoe to the best advantage, and no polishing is necessary. The varnish is also an effective waterproofing.

Patent leather may be made from kid, calf, and cowhide. Calfskin, because of its firm, solid texture, is said to make the most satisfactory of all patent leathers. It is a problem for the shopper to know how to distinguish the better and poorer grades. However, recently invented varnish coatings are more pliant, and therefore less liable to crack. Patent leather was made in the United States as early as 1818, but only recently has the process attained its present excellence, until now it rivals the French and German finishes.

When to Find Acorns

Many members of the tree-planting army like the oak. As a group, oaks carry general marks of distinction from other trees. One of these marks is the bearing of acorns, in which the oak has no competition, says the American Tree association of Washington, which for a two-cent stamp will send you tree-planting suggestions.

All of the oaks may be grouped as either white or black. To the former group belong the white oak proper and the bur oak, swamp white oak, chestnut oak, overcup oak, the post oak, and live oak, which may be recognized by the rounded lobes of their leaves, with the exception of the post oak and live oak, which have no lobes; and by their light gray or light buffish-brown bark, which breaks off into loose, flaky scales. The bur oak is distinguished from its close kinsmen by its corklike branches. The trees of this group mature their acorns in a single year, and for this reason acorns of old and new crops are never found on the same tree.
