SPECIAL FIRE FIGHTING CREWS

Emergency forest fire crews are a new feature of the Forest Service protective organization in the Pacific Northwest this year, according to announcement just made by District Forester C. M. Granger.

Each crew or squadron consists of one forest fire chief, two or three foremen, one camp superintendent and one cook. They are located at strategic points in the forest fire regions, and will be used only to direct the work on large fires. Each squadron is supplied with motor transport for a quick getaway, and is in telephone communication with the Forest Supervisor's headquarters. During the time they are not actually needed on forest fires, they will work on road and bridge building and other forest improvements.

"When a bad forest fire period develops," said Mr. Granger, "one of the greatest difficulties is to secure experienced men to take charge of the work. We hope to simplify this problem through the newly organized squadrons, which will give us the skeleton organization for handling a large crew efficiently. Action—and immediate action—is the first requirement in fire fighting. The smoldering cigarette stub, easily pinched before being thrown away, may require hundreds of men to put it out—if it is not put out while small."

The squadrons are located as follows: Mount Hood Loop Road, Fire Chief C. C. Hon, covering the Columbia National Forest in southern Washington, and the western Oregon group of National Forests; Deadwood-Soda Springs road on the Crater National Forest, Fire Chief W. L. Jones, covering the southern Oregon group; Cispus Bridge on the Rainier National Forest, Fire Chief J. L. Hagon, covering the western Washington group; and Lake Chelan, Fire Chief Asher Ireland, covering the eastern Washington group of National Forests.

The fire chiefs are all regular Forest Rangers with many years experience in handling large forest fires. The other members of the squadrons are local residents who have had extensive experience in forest fire fighting.

Mrs. Boydie Landes and two children of New York City is visiting at the home of her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Kukacka, who met them in Portland last Thursday. Mrs. Landes says we have a wonderful country and the most beautiful scenery she ever saw.

DAIRY COW PAYS

Some time ago this paper published a story from J. N. Long on the productivity of his cows, which at that time had anything around here beaten to a frazzle that we had heard of, when four of his cows brought him over $74, and then the story about nine cows belonging to Con Westenhous bringing him over $200, in one month.

Now comes E. J. Holland, mail carrier on route 1, with one cow's record that beats them all. This cow produced $32.50 worth of milk during the month of June, $25.12 of which was sold to the condenser, and the balance used at home. It is doubtful if there is another cow in the community that can beat her, and if there is the Tribune would be glad to tell its readers about it.

The above proves the Tribune's contention that it pays to buy and spend at home the whole year around—it is money in our own pockets to do so.

DRESS OF WOMEN

Do women dress to please the men or themselves? This question, asked by N. H. Comish, professor of economics and sociology, created a near riot in his conservation class at O.A.C.

A few proud and dignified feminine members of the class responded with a haughty "No," but when questioned personally they meekly admitted that they did a little bit. The class was nearly equally divided on the question.

Scientists believe that women dress to appeal to other women and not men, Professor Comish told his class, but he thinks that they all would make a few changes if they thought their idol would be a little more pleased, especially if the change could be made without too many "eatty" remarks originating from the other members of their sex.
