Have our citizens forgotten why they waited until it rained?

These are real autumn days, and the farmer is making the dirt fly in his field. Seeding will soon be over and the winter will hold no terror for our farmers.

The best of the agricultural display at the Linn county fair is on display at the state fair. It should be a winner, for that was a great display at Albany.

The Pacific International Livestock Exposition will be held in North Portland, beginning Oct. 31 and ending Nov. 7. If possible, it will be bigger and better than ever.

To exonerate Frank Hora from any criticism of an unsavory nature, the Scio Tribune takes the blame for the error in his prune ad when it printed 50c instead of $1.00 per bushel; the error was not noted by us until Mr. Hora called our attention to it. We hope our readers will not condemn him for our error—rather humiliating for both of us.

Strangers are making inquiries about this community every week now, and some one comes in person almost every week, seeking a new location, some want to rent and some to buy. Some one's duty should be to show the visitors around and help them find a suitable place. He who helps others helps himself most, and it's high time each of us extend a little help.

"It's by far the strangest case I ever heard of—four men in a loaded canoe, wiped out without a clue, without leaving a scrap of birch bark or a piece of their $18,000 cargo of fur!" The old man was baffled. Read of exciting adventure in the Hudson's Bay country in a serial novel soon to begin in the Tribune. Don't miss the opening chapter. If not a reader, start now.

Visitors to the state fair should not fail to visit the O A C and U of O booths this year. You will find there exhibits of many ways in converting much material that goes to waste into usefulness and cash. The women will find that it is better to use the real American beauty products, such as carrots for vim, beets for rouge, and other foods that build the beauty from within—how "evolution" beats "involution," at least in building beauty.

A Salem man, after attending the Billy Sunday meeting in Portland last Friday night, said "it was the best sermon he ever heard and seen." Quite right. Mr. Sunday knows how to put over his message, both in action and words. If his hearers had ears for the sublime as he preaches the gospel, and not a tongue to ridicule the preacher, there would be more good noticed in the world today than of evil. If there is a place for mankind to show his charity to mankind, it surely is after he has placed his name on a church roll. One hypocrite in a church does more harm than a hundred saints can do good. A church member that plays cards has no influence upon the young and the gamblers know they are their equal; the church member who dances cannot consistently teach a Sunday school class, nor can the church member who flirts with booze lead a prayer meeting nor preside at or take part in a moral uplift campaign. It is these Billy Sunday tries to show the light of day, and it is these who make the work of Billy Sunday and other ministers so negligible. In this day the real "sinners" have their names enrolled on some church roster—it makes no real difference so long as it affords them their best field to reach their goal. If there is eternal damnation for the sinner in a fire of hell, how will the hypocrite escape it? That is the individual Billy Sunday is trying to save, for a hypocrite is the worst of all.

Beets For Rouge

(By C. J. McIntosh)

Ways of converting the raw materials of farm, factory and home into finished products of the most desirable form, rather than mere desiderata of past achievements, are stressed in the state fair exhibits this year, including those of the state college and experiment station. Among the many showings of the wealth of Oregon resources and their manipulation, those are highly suggestive.

The weakness of the farm management system that like a merry-go-round is always busy, but gets no where, is shown in merry-go-round form with 10 horses representing the 10 most common weaknesses, such as wrong crops, lack of rotation, low unit production, and poor marketing. A little farm, all laid out with buildings, orchard, garden, woodlot, pastures and fields, shows the way the best farmers are putting it over. Handling the crops to get the best of production and the least damage from insect and disease injury is shown to be the easiest way.

A house of health large enough to accommodate many visitors shows in its structure and colors the fundamental factors of child health and vigor. A young lady, seen building her beauty from the outside from rouge pots, is told by her more prepossessing sisters that the real American beauty products are carrots for vim, beets for rouge, and other foods that build beauty from within—how "evolution" beats "involution," at least in building beauty.

Retrieving wealth from waste forest products is seen in small distillation plants taking cedar and myrtle oils right out of sawdust and leaves, in which these essential oils are abundant. A plant is now actually at work at Marshfield converting the waste sawdust into valuable cedar oils, and showing that the industry may be made to pay good profits.

The possibilities of the best alfalfa rightly used, the most profitable grains and handling systems, and going ways with dairy and other livestock, are other features.
