

The Corvallis Times says: "The old court house building is torn down and the archives are giving birth to many curiosities. It is wonderful the value that is being placed on some worthless but ancient trinkets as they are torn from the walls of the old seat of justice. Everything of course of real value has been moved into the new building, but there are hundreds of things that are curiosities to the average Corvallisites of to-day. Files of old newspapers that have been thrown into the street, and in these many items of interest appear. The Salem Statesman printed away back in the beginning of the sixties has many curious paragraphs. Marriage notices were read by the grown-up children of the contracting parties and the columns are filled with war news. In the issue of June 23, 1862, the official vote of the state is given for that year, at which time it seems they took a vote on where to establish the seat of state government. It resulted in the selection of Salem with 3112 votes, Portland 1780 votes, Eugene City 1572 votes and Corvallis 941 votes.

SEATTLE AND TACOMA.

"They tell a pretty hard story on you over in Seattle," said Mr. E. E. Russell of Chicago, yesterday, on his return from that live and future great city. "A great man had a dream in which he made a tour of sheol. Lucifer, there, was showing the visitor the sights, when they came upon a number of inmates pawing up the ground with both hand and feet, scraping little heaps of earth together. Upon inquiring who they were, the old boy said they were Seattle real estate agents. Soon a long row of cages was reached in each of which a captive was chained so they could not see one another. "What are these?" asked the visitor. "They are from Tacoma. We have to keep them chained up in that way in solitary confinement in order to keep them from getting together and naming the place Tacoma."—Tacoma Globe.

In a half page advertisement in one of our exchanges, of a dry goods merchant, is this sentence: "Our newspapers are the lives of our city and are bread winners for the merchants." There is a whole volume in this sentence. A city or town without one or more live newspapers is not worth the space it occupies. A newspaper, rightly conducted, is worth more to a town or community than thousands of dollars invested in any other enterprise.
