The silver Portland printer was through the mid of the Sa tom the other day with a font primer and a couple of galley's done in his extra shirt, looking for a location on the Oregon Pacific railroad to start a timber land sheet. In his back pocket were half a dozen column rules, while in his hat he carried a bodkin and a job stick. Inside of six months he may be a rich man—and may be not.—Oregonian.

Spokane Falls, justly thinking that its prosperity doesn't depend on allowing vice to disport itself with wide-open doors, has put a stop to the unlawfully open gambling that had been going on in its midst. Someone urged that if gambling was stopped the act would "kill the town;" but sensible persons think gambling leads to vice rather than to prosperity.—Oron-ian.

Joaquin Miller utters this prose-poem of the new state of the mountains: Montana is and must remain till her glorious grass set mountains change color, the tawny lion of the North.
Looking out and up toward Canada as a climb and climb for the summit, in see such a red of color, such a continuity of mountains set on mountain. All grass around you, and a set; sin pushed up into heavy up against the lers. All east on such a tion of congress to you. In caucus or elsewhere, for speaker whose record does not show him the consistent friend of the movement for the restoration of silver, but the attempt to defeat Reed in this manner will amount to nothing since his nomination.—Salem States-
