

Officers of the United States senate, some of whom have been in the service of a century, are aghast at the audacity of Senator Moody, of South Dakota, who improved the first days of the session in securing the appointment of his son Warren as page on the floor of the senate. This is declared to be the first instance on record in which the son of a senator has filled the office of page. Nepotism is generally conceded to be the most dangerous "ism" that flourishes in Washington, hence the fact that this case is "without precedent" in its most astonishing feature.

Idaho feels piqued to think the president did not mention her aspirations for statehood in his message.

The Walla Walla Journal says: "We found this about the hardest time to collect outstanding little accounts, and we wonder whether the same boys who temporarily failed the same way? We would rather people who will not pay cheerfully when their bill is presented, would never patronize us at all."
