Bar room in Portland. Enter Col. Bluebeard. "Bar keep some Bourbon straight, please." Bar keep, who is somewhat absent minded, mistakes order, and filling glass with Portland water, sets before the Col., who, raising glass to his mouth, drinks the contents, throws down a dime, turns from the bar, seats himself for a comfortable rest. Thirty minutes later, Col. B. again approaches the bar. "Bar keep, give me another of those new-fangled drinks, same as the last."

George Saltmarsh, a former resident of Lebanon, while escorting his wife on the streets of Albany this week, fired a pistol shot at her, inflicting a slight wound in the neck, and then shot himself in the head. Saltmarsh, it is said, complained of his wife's infidelity to him, and attachment for another man. Lacerated affections cause many heartburnings in society, and as is often the case are followed by fatal consequences. Saltmarsh, it is thought will not recover.

To cover up grease spots.—Carefully unhook an ink bottle and, in crossing the room, drop the bottle on the exact spot that you dropped the grease; the ink will effectually cover up the grease spot, which will never again be noticed.

To make hens lay two eggs a day (this is a very valuable receipt and originally sold for something less than $500).—Procure two laying hens.

To cure toothache.—This is certainly a very painful and annoying complaint, but can be effectually prevented by wearing false teeth.

How to put up a stovepipe without soiling your hand, losing your temper, and using cross words. Get some other fellow to do the job.

To prevent hot water from burning or blistering the hands.—It often occurs that people are seriously scalded from hot water; this can be easily prevented by allowing the water to cool before using.

VALUABLE AND USEFUL INFORMATION.

A SUICIDE AVERTED.

Two men met at the edge of a precipice. One said to the other: "What are you doing here bothering me? I am going to drown myself; I am a wood worker and am discontented—going to put an end to my career by jumping from this bluff. What are you doing here bothering me?" "I am going to do the same thing, for I am a blacksmith and am disgusted with the people; they are bothering me to death. I can't make them happy by doing their work satisfactorily or any other way. Unless I can get the help of some good wood worker I must surely jump from the cliff." "Don't, brother, for I will quell the storm. Brace up now, and we will do better than ever." So they went to work with a will. Look at the result—there was never a more economical piece of work put on the field than the "Common Sense Harbin Harrow," put up by Joseph Harbin, Red Front Shop, Lebanon, Oregon.

First-class work at McClure's barber shop.

A PORTLAND BARBER.

The following, from the pen of one of our correspondents, tells how the Portland barbers work a sucker:

"Cap. A—is an old timer, and if not a 'forty niner' has been on this coast many years. He has experienced all the vicissitudes of early days; He has trapped 'grizzly bar,' fought Indians, been interested in extensive mining speculations, and is, to say the least of it, decidedly not a tenderfoot. Cap. has 'bucked the tiger,' and in early days has lost and won a fortune at a sitting. During the last Mechanic's Institute he visited Portland. It was then that we met, and he informed me that he had struck a game that he could not beat. Said the Captain: 'Pard, I have knoched about this coast many years and during that time have been tackled by confidence men, bogus dust men, three card monte men, and highwaymen. I have stood them all off, but Pard, do you see that shop across the street with a big 15 cents painted on the window? That's the 'joint' that beats them all. Let me whisper in your ear, it's a barber shop, and they have just 'worked me' in about twenty minutes for $3.75. I don't mind the money, but they are getting 'way ahead of the bunco man,' and he has my sympathy for he has to pay for his deeds occasionally. Tell you how it was. I saw painted on the window in large letters 'shaving 15 cents.' As I wanted a shave I went in and took a seat. 'Shave, sir?' 'Yes.' And operations commenced. The shave was quickly and well done, but my hair, I was informed, was 'long and terribly uneven,' it must be clipped. I thought this queer as I had just the day before had my hair cut, but submitted. The clipping was finished and, say, here's a new racket. I was informed that science demanded that my hair should be singed. I expostulated, but in vain and the agony began. The outfit for this operation is a very expensive and elaborate and consisted of an old iron comb and a short piece of wax taper. Some time was consumed burning the ends of perhaps a dozen hairs, which I was informed would keep the natural oil in them. I was about to rise from the chair, but was gently pushed back and in the most emphatic manner told it would never do to go without a 'sea foam.' Pard, I only had about a hundred dollars in my pocket and began to feel uneasy, but thought I would stay with the game, and so stood the 'sea foam' craze, a bottle of hair tonic and a bottle of face wash, and eventually when we came to settle the 'monstrous article' looked deliberately at the big sign of 15 cents a shave and figured up the following items:

1 Shave $ 25
1 Hair cut 25
1 Singe 25
1 Sea foam 25
1 Shampoo 25
1 bottle hair tonic 1 25
1 " face wash 1 25

Total $3 75

"I settled the bill, but, Pard, when you want a shave during fair time, take a back shop for there's some fellows in this town whose ancestors in early days meandered through the streets of Jerusalem, and say, these fellows want the world."
