was during the earlier days of difornia. I had returned to San neisch after successfully terminaog important business in the mines, and now being possessed of plenty of duet," awaited the departure of the aret steamer for the Eastern States. n those days the ocean steamer arrivd and departed but once a month, the vent being one of considerable imporance not only to business men, but also the entire population whe, at the sound of the cannon, which every steamer discharged on nearing the city, would flock to the landing, impatient to hear the news and welcome newly arrived friends.

A few days passed, and one morning on entering the hotel office I was informed that the most welcome steamer had arrived the previous night. First and arrived the previous night. First to the post office for letters from home, then to purchase a ticket and secure a serth on the outward bound steamer, berth on the outward bound steamer, and all arrangements would be completed for, I hoped, a speedy and safe return home. The day was bright and clear, and as I, in a lazy mood, sauntered along the busy streets, the thoughts of the many changes that year had wrought, that were passing through my mind, were suddenly dispelled by a smart slap on the shoulder, and I turned to grasp the outstretched hand of my old schrolmate, Harry Keen. "Well, old man, I've found you at last. Hear you've got rich and return home by the next cost. Glad to see you anyhow, want some points on the mines." We returned to the hotel, Harry received the "points," and the balance of the day was consumed purchasing his outfit for the mines, for which he intended starting the next day. Supper was ever; we mines, for which he intended starting the next day. Supper was ever; we had smoked our cigars; the twinkling stars had put in an appearance, and the many sounds peculiar to night in San Francisco began to be heard. "Let's take a stroll and see the sights," and Harry, and so lighting a fresh cigar, we walked down Kearney street, past gambling houses, saleous, "cheap Jehns," beer cellars where the so called "Hurdy Gurdys" and "Beer Slingers." mostly German and Swedish girls imported for that purpose, either danced or served their patrons with beer. Now we reach Jackson street and a pandisomium of sound breaks upon the ear, the discordant sounds of and a pandisomium of sound breaks upon the ear, the discordant sounds of squeaky violins, bag pipes, horns, drums, an indescribable din of so called music coming from the many open doors of closely ranged "dives," lining both sides of the street from Kearney to Dupont streets, Spanish dance houses, German dance houses, negro dance houses, beer halls, bar rooms, notorious places kept by the lowest class of humanity, equally notorious for their lewd and brutal conduct; quickly we pass these unniviting for their lewd and brutal conduct; quickly we pass these uninviting haunts of vice and turning enter Murderer's Alley, where, closely packed in small dirty shanties, are found the lowest and most filthy portion of the Chinese population; the doors of the hovels are wide open and in each least be seen a table upon which is placed a thinese idel, surrounded by the various offerings and burning lamp, never allowed to go out; passing through the alley we enter Washington street and breathe more pure air. The bands are playing in front of the Eldorado and Belle Union gambling 'salvons. We will enter the Belle Union and see how it these with those who are trying their es with those who are trying their led luck. The saloon is crowded vd representing almost every nationalits, most of whom are deeply interested in the varion games of chance being dealt by men and wowen; the air is heavy with the fumes of liquor and tobacco smoke; the mo-motonous voice of the dealers mingles with the rattle of ivory checks or sharp metalfic ring of gold and silver coin, which is piled on the various tables to the extent of many thousand dollars. "Ze red wins and ze black loses," cries the desiler as we approach the game known as "Rouge et Nor." An eager crowd ore assembled around the table analously watching the cards as they anxiously watching the cards as they fall either to the players' gain or loss, but most absorbed and excited was a but most absorbed and excited was a player occupying a prominent position in front of the table. He was but a boy, fair haired, blue eyed and honest looking, a laughing, merry face under other circumstances; but now drawn and set, beads of perspiration on brow, eyes that shone with desperation and saw but the fast diminishing stack of coin that at every turn from the box was fast filling the money drawer of the dealer of the game; another deal and another loss upon loss. Was it luck or science? The players would say luck, but the professional gambler would say science. A few pieces of gold coin yet remained to the player, and as a new deal commenced they were placed upon the square of red, were placed upon the square of red, and with slow precision the game went on. "Ze black wins and ze red loses." Over the face of the boyish player a gray pallor crept, he trembled from head to foot, and turning staggered rather than walked from the game. Harry and I remained but a short time, and a remained but a short time, and emerging from the saloon took our way down Washington street. We had proceeded but a short distance before a slight crowd obstructed the sidewalk, and stopping to ascertain the cause were informed that "a man had just shot himself:" Elbowing my way through the throng I saw lying prostrate upon the dusty walk, face upturned to the cold clear moon, the boy player at "Rouge et Nor," who had made "his last bet." The remains, typen which nothing was found for identification, the sole article being a time woun and dim letter to "My dear son," and signed "From your loving mother," was taken an charge by the corotter and laid away in a pauper's traits and Views, and if you wish a thing in their line, if they cannot play you, you need not try elsewhere.

New Hampshire, in a tiny cottage, a gentle, patient, grey haired mother awaits the coming of her boy, and daily prays that God will restore the wanderer to his home, but let us hope an all wise Providence will pardon the boy's last rash act, and that mother and son may meet in Heaven.

SCHOOL NOTES.

We would be glad indeed to see more visitors come to our school.

Now is your chance, girls; be up and in the fields while birds are plentiful.

We are expecting Mr. M. A. Miller here on Friday to give us a talk, on "Reading."

Jay Bird Graduate is absent from school this week, so his partner has to take his place.

School is getting slack now, as some of the scholars have been falling off ince Christmas.

The scholars who attended the Insti-tute at Albany last week report having a faverable time.

Rev. G. W. Giboncy, formerly of Lebanon, paid this school a pleasant visit on Tuesday morning.

The editor seems to hold that "woman excels man in pure intellectual force," and draws conclusions. White we shall try to abate nothing from the mental worth of the ladies we will defend the cause of right for this is a personal matter. Yes, we really think the girls are willing to accept the matter as final. There is a reason for this; we have been challenging them for another debate and they won't agree to it because they are afraid there will not be so much partiality shown sext time. The thing is, they are afraid to attack us again. attack us again.

We are very much obliged to the editor of THE EXPRESS for not failing to overlook us in mentioning those attended the Institute last week, for we really did have the pleasure of being with that honorable body a day being with that honorable body a day and a half, and we think that were we to live to be as old as Methuselah we would not forget this eventful day in our career. Long before the peep of day we crawled out and hurried to the train only to get there too early, and we were obliged to sit around on the railing until the palace car was spened for our reception. We arrived in Albany soon after dawn, and after skirmishing over the city—but we did not get lost—we brought up at the school house where the Institute was to be held. After sitting around until we were afraid our pants would be worn out, we remember of writing our name on a slip of paper, in all the attitude of a school teacher, and cramming it into the hat as it passed, in order to get reduced fare over the railroad.

As our dinner sadly disagreed with duced fare over the railroad.

As our dinner sadly disagreed with us, we do not retain much of the discussion of the afternoon session. But one point impressed itself very forcibly, which we must mention. When the tellers took up the questions the only one of any importanc, there being but two, was as follows, apdressed to Bro. Bell, the fat man of Roseburg: "If a child should, by some means, get some black ink on his nose would good rub it off with your finger?" you rub it off with your finger?"

With some remarks about bugs, snakes, and dancing in the public school, the afternoon session closed.

The entertainment at the opera house

The entertainment at the opera house in the evening was pronounced to be good by everybody. But we saw no special occasion for the applause in some cases, although we had company we were not in the best of sgirit, for the lady was more than eighty years old and not very garrulous, hence we were not so well entertained as we might have been under other circumstances. After the entertainment was stances. After the entertainment was over we were in a worse perplexity, for we did not have enough money to pay our way at the hotel, but fertu-nately it turned out that we did not have to sleep in a box ear or police

In the merning we rose bright and early and at the required time repaired to the school house where the Insti-tute soon resumed session. Quite an interesting discussion was held about school libraries, but this, of course, being of little importance it was sim-mered into the very important quesmered into the very important queswrite or should print his first lessons."
This discussion resulted in a victory for a lady who held that he should

After dinner we rolled into the baggage (or palace, if you please) car, and arrived in Lebanon with 67.9 cents in our poeket, and having incurred no stain on our moral character.

Now we deem it a thing that all should attend all such institutions as this, when they are given cut rates. At least we considered it a great treat as it was the first time we were out of civilization.

A Sample of Cheek.
The professional "tramp" piles his calling with all the business scumen of a Gould or Vanderbilt; but, as in the a Geuld or Vanderbilt; but, as in the following case an unreasonable demand upsets the shrewdest calculations. A representative of the abovenamed class called at the residence of one of our citizens and demanded a dish of soup. The good lady of the house teld him that she had none on hand; he again ordered his favorite dish prepared, but was told that the absense of beef rendered a compliance with his order impossible. With the imperative tone of a Napoleon Bonaparts, he ordered a fat steer killed and his favorite dish prepared. The beef was not slain. The above transpired in Lebanon and is fact. a Lebanon and is fact.
