The bastille had not yet fallen. The thoughtless youth of the French aristocracy still danced through the saloons of the royal castles. Maurepas still reigned prime minister - the same friend of humanity who made the compassionate decision concerning the peo-ple's welfare: "Why build hospitals, Can not the people die on the roads if

This evening Maurepas had the honor of being permitted to lead the beautiful Marie Autoinette to the card-table, but, complaining of a severe headache as they passed through the saloon, the good queen excused him from further attendance that the pain might not be increased. As he was hastening back through the ante-chamber to the dancing hall, where the king was taking his coffee, he perceived beneath the gobelin tapestry of the famous Louvois window man in citizens' dress, who regarded him expectantly and bowed low before

"It is all right, Dumonet," whispered the asthmatic old man; "this evening his majesty will taste of it." And he forthwith thrilled out one of his hundred madrigals, which, in truth, were tame enough, but which his flatterers found very witty. In the royal apart-ment he saw just then Louis XVI. take from a sugar basin two delicately broken lumps of sugar and sweeten his coffee with them. As the king took a mouthful of the coffee the ministerial friend of the people approached and asked respectfully:
"How does your majesty find the coffee this evening?" 'As usual, excellent."

The queen cast a penetrating glance

Lived Among Cannibals. Beresford Alfred, Baron d'Este, and his wife, nee Harney, whose first husband was the Viscount de None, are at the Southern. The Baron d'Este is a Frenchman by birth, an Italian by descent, an Englishman through his mother, and a man of many countries by virtue of travel and inclination. He wears his title lightly, as one who has seen much of the world and lived

The Baron is a handsome man, with a sunburned face, speaks English like an Englishman, and does not look over 40 years of age, though he may be older. As a young man he spent several years in Australia, but in 1870, when cotton was commanding it; still when a maiden has sifted a kiss and he cheerfully paid for the dinners a very high price, he, in company with a number of friends, went into the business of raising the costly product on the Fiji Islands. The islands at that time were inhabited largely by cannibals, and white men, though assisted by the friendly natives, carried their lives in their hands, and went

The Navajo tribe of Indians own immense flocks of well-bred sheep, and the wool clip averages 1,500,000 pounds annually. A part of this finds its way into the regular market through the traders, but the great portion is care-fully selected for the manufacture of blankets. After being cleansed, earded and dyed by a process known only to themselves, the wool is ready for

The weavers are important personages, and will only perform the labor of making the blanket, therefore the work of erecting the hogan, which contains the loom, devolves upon the squaws. The hogan is made by planting six rough-hewn poles, about eight feet high, in the earth at regular intervals, forming a full square. On top of these boughs of trees are placed to form a roof and shade from the burning rays of the sun. The center poles form the sides of the room, and about a foot from the top and bottom cross poles, with holes bored through them for the warp, are securely fastened with rawhide throngs.

The warp is made from the fibers of the yucca tree. It is treated in a manner known only to those who prepare it, and the secret will not be divulged to a white man, therefore their blankets can only be duplicated in quality and texture by themselves. Formerly these blankets were made solely for their own use, but since they were con-quered by the Government and thrown almost entirely upon their own re-sources for a livelihood, the value of their blankets was impressed upon
