granger wrote the celitor, asking the best way to raise beets. Mark, in his characteristic way, replied that the best way known to him was "to seize the tops with both hands and pull." To be sure this reply cost the editor one subscriber and some wholesale abuse, but we venture the opinion that there is more sound, practical, wisdom in this answer to an honest inquiry than most people will allow on the first reading. There is more sound, practical, will be supported by the superintendent, Mr. Jaeger, is embodied in that one word "pull" one-half, at least, of the practical wisdom of fifty-eight centuries. Couple the word "pull" with its correlative "push" and you have the aggregated wisdom of the aggregated wisdo with its correlative "push" and you have the exgregated wisdom of the ages, the key to all success, and a business combination that is thorough and practical. You must know that in order to succeed in any undortaking you must work, and this means either to pull or push. The practical agriculturist knows (the theorist does not) that you cannot dig potatoes with a lead pencil, neither can you market a many effect of the theory. Men have been victimized by the oppine that "the world owes a man a living," have treated with contempt the instructions given the world's first business man, "In the sweat of thy face shall then eath the action of the sweat of thy face shall then eath the action of the world's first business man, "In the sweat of thy face shall then eath the odd get the thunderfolt. About the 15th of April 1 was suffering from a very valent attack that almost progranted me in such a manuer tast I was bent over. When I sat down it was almost impossible for me to get up alone, or to put on my clothes, when kind Providence sent Dr. Henley, with the OMEGON KIDNEY THA, to my hatel. I immediately commenced using the tea. It had an almost miraculous effect, and to the astonishment of all the guests at the hotel, in a few days, I am happy to state, that I was a new man. I will recommend the tea to all afflicted as I have been.
