Lucca's Tender Beart

The following anecdote is told by the Warsaw papers, demonstrating the good heart of the celebrated singer, Lucca. As is well known, Bismarck was one of the warmest admirers of her talent and often visited her. Once, when walking together along one of the Berlin streets, they noticed the sad spectacle of a photographer's establish-ment being sold at auction. The busi-ness had not prospered and they were selling his property to pay some debts. "Unfortunate people!" said Lucca; "let us help them. Count." "Willingly," "Ah! how provoking it is," exclaimed Lucca; "neither have I any money about me. . . . Or, again, take the instance of the pretty young matron who, while devoted to home, husband, and chil-dren, yet has several intimate friends of the male persuasion. But her influ-ence is all for good. Her fascination is exerted in a worthy cause, and she has found out a great truth—that there is no friendship so lasting as time and is no friendship so lasting, so true, and so pleasant as one between persons of opposite sexes, where a true feeling of bonne camaraderie exists and there is no pretense to love-making. Such a woman, if she lives long enough, bids fair to develop into a snowy-haired old lady on whose friendship the children will rely. presenting a thrilling scene.

Rodger W. O'Meara, a newspaper man, who was the principal witness against Charles Dorsey, convicted of the murder of Banker Cummings on a stage at Moore's Flat, writes to the Grass Valley Franscript from Chicago that a short time ago he saw Dorsey, who went to prison for life, but escaped three years ago in that city.
