Hain't she the handsomest and dearest husband in the world, who petted and humored her to her heart's content? It is very queer the fondness some women have for being petted. It's rather a cat-like trait, this liking to be purred and coddled so this liking to be purred and coddled so silence, and still she sat there much. The most interesting spot in Cambridge is the old Longfellow house where Miss Longfellow, the elder daughter, and Rev. Samuel Longfe daughter, and Rev. Samuel Lagfellow, the brother of the poet, now live. The house looks exactly as it did in the old days when the great poet received his friends with sweet and gentle courtesy. His spirit seems to haunt the rooms and halfs and will be ever present to those who had the privilege of his friendship. The two younger daughters, Mrs. Richard H. Dana and Mrs. Joseph G. Thorpe, Jr., have built houses adjoining the old estate, so that the Longfellow sisters live side by side, in the order of primogeniture. Across Brattle street is the little park named in honor of the dead poet. It was an appropriate idea that the vacant land over which Longfellow's eyes so often wandered as he look from his windows should remain
