

It was a lovely scene. I had never seen anything so beautiful before. The sun was shining brightly, and the water was so clear that I could see the bottom of the lake. The trees were so green and the flowers were so bright...

Quiller was putting on his coat. He answered my unspoken question with a solemnity for which I was not prepared. "For twenty-two years these two portraits have been waiting for their opportunity. Let us be thankful that in the end they found it."

"He seemed to forget to take leave of us in any way as he went. He looked at me as if he were waiting for me to say something. He looked at me as if he were waiting for me to say something...

A King in a Tortoise-Shell. The cradle that a queen should choose for her infant child must be a very grand affair, don't you think so?

Accepting the theory of astronomers that our sun and the millions of other suns were evolved from masses of nebulous matter, we should like to know how the earth and the rest of our sun's family came into existence.

What are called spiral nebulae—nebulous bodies which are evidently rotating or whirling, have lately been discovered in the sky.

It is a cradle made of tortoise-shell. Shouldn't you think it would break very easily? It would if it were this cradle in which the king's infant child was to be born.

IN THE VALLEY OF DEATH. Lieut. Brannan's Experiences on the Battlefield.

"I visited 'The Valley of the Dead' when on the Indian frontier some months ago," said Lieut. Leon Brannan when talking to a Chicago Tribune reporter. The lieutenant is connected with her Majesty's service in India, and registered from Calcutta.

"The place is called the Valley of the Dead," explained the officer, "on account of the deadly fumes there. But the fumes do not come from the poisonous gases that are present, as has ever been explained. The deadly place is about thirty-five feet below the surrounding ground, looks like a dry bed, and is about as deep as the width of a man's arm.

"There is no apparent cause for the strip of deadly fumes that extends to the valley. After I passed through it I became bolder and approached the edge of the deadly place. I was anxious to see the bottom of the valley if possible, but was afraid to make the attempt as I had been warned to give the place a wide berth. I determined, however, to see what the fumes smelled like and to see the bottom of the valley if possible, but was afraid to make the attempt as I had been warned to give the place a wide berth.

"No one has yet been able to explain the cause of the fetid emanations from the earth, the natives say, and so many lives have been sacrificed in attempts to explore the valley. It is evident, however, that the fumes are not from the bottom of the valley, but from the ground it fell dead. I don't believe it lived half a minute after entering the deadly place.

"The folk lore of the Indians of Michigan is almost a thing of the past, but the legends of the past are preserved in the present time. To be sure, there are a few of the old natives, whose locks have been whitened by the recurring frosts of many winters, who preserve a few of the old legends of the past. Such a one is Widen-da-groosh, an aged bear, whose huge proportions gave him the name mentioned, which, translated into English, means giant.

"Once upon a time a huge she-bear was compelled to desert the shores of Wisconsin, and she gradually came to the waters of Michigan, the great lake, on account of fires that were raging in the wilderness. The heat was so intense that the mother bear and her cubs fled from the shores of Wisconsin, and struck boldly out for the banks of Michigan. When nearly across the lake the two cubs sank from exhaustion, and the mother bear, who had been swimming for many hours, but her cubs rose not again. Finally weariness compelled her to seek the shore, reaching which she climbed a bank and lay down to sleep. That bluff was Sleeping Bear Point, and from that day to this the spirit of the old bear has remained on that bluff, and from the spirit bear have come the legends of the past.

"The 1-2 cent has become a necessity in trade, and the American Newsdealer's association will petition congress to establish a 1-2 cent coinage. On 1-2 cent paper currency, the profit on 1-2 cent coins is lost because there is no coin of this value. An appreciable loss arises from this source in the course of a year. It is a pity that the government should not issue a coin of this value in such a way that the 1-2 cent coins are in, and in every case goes to the dealer. This coin is a large establishment certainly amounts to several dollars daily, while the buyers lose of the 1-2 cent coin. The Philadelphia divisions of currency and retail stores have made these small coins a necessity in Europe. A centime is a fifth of a cent. Switzerland has a centime piece, Belgium has a centime piece, Germany has the pfennig, equal to one-fourth of a cent.—Age of Steel.

"It is said that the Confederate soldiers captured by the Union at Richmond and the Southern citizens saved the United States hundreds of thousands of dollars in the Court of Claims. No sooner does an alleged patriot like Southern citizens, who are making for compensation for property taken or destroyed by Federal troops than an officer sets to work to hunt through these volumes to his advantage to find evidence to prove the falsity of the petitioner. Often the search is successful, and not infrequently it happens that the claimant is confronted with writings of his own, which show that he was in full accord with the Confederate Government.—Richmond Dispatch.

Home Life Among Royalty. Life at Sandringham is very simple, says Lord Esher. The royal family who are there; the Princesses breakfast in her private apartment, while the young princesses break their fast in an old-fashioned room still known as the school-room. When this meal is over they come to luncheon, and the young princesses are accompanied by a group of pet dogs. The gentlemen go out shooting or riding, while the ladies in the house amuse themselves with their work, and later in the day, are joined by the Princesses. Luncheon brings all together, and this informal meal is, when the season will permit, served in a hall, put up in the woods near where the night hunters are. The Princess leads the procession going to this in a smart yellow cart drawn by the plumpest of ponies, driving herself and one of her lady guests. She is, by-the-by, an extremely good whip. Luncheon over, the ladies return to Sandringham House, everybody meeting again at five o'clock tea, and dinner being served in the dining-room at about half-past eight o'clock. The Prince and Princess dine with their guests; the Princess sitting in the center of one side of the table, while the Prince is exactly opposite. When dessert is served a pipper plays the bagpipes in the corridor outside, in veritable Highland style, in pacing backwards and forwards.

A recent survey has established the number of glaciers in the Alps at 1,150, of which 249 have a length of more than four and three-quarter miles. The French Alps contain 140, and Austria only 75. Switzerland has 47, and Austria 462.

A Young Man's Memento. Old Vickers—Oh, of course, you think you know ever so much more than your father. Young Vickers—Oh, no, I don't; indeed I don't. It is, no doubt, true that your father has more experience, more than your father has more experience, more than your father has more experience. —Indianapolis Journal.
