In Eulogy of Mrs. Maggie Coffey.

The following lines written in remembrance of Mrs. Maggie Coffey, lately deceased, wife of D. D. Coffey and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. R. Badger, are appropriate and timely in that a large circle of friends are reminded of the shortness of life and are made better by her example prior to and at the close of a life so full of pure and kindly precept.

It is said, none knew her but to be drawn into an atmosphere of better thought and determination.

It is but a change for the better, and who would wish her back from things heavenly to the grossness of things earthly.

God calls his own and one by one the righteous are chosen as rank and file of the host in review before the great white throne. A poet said, "Lead kindly light," and husband, father, mother, sisters, brothers and friends feel gently drawn where "Maggie" leads, are "only waiting till the shadows are a little longer gone."

Dear Maggie you have entered the radiant springtime,
Where you are blessed with God's sweet rest peace.

Ah, have the days revealed to you a bright and beautiful chime,
Since from earth's bondage was given you a glad release.

Ah, what have you seen of His goodness and glory,
So sweet, so soothing, so brilliant and ineffably bright,

How near have you been to the chastening presence,
Of all that is sweet and pure of "love and of light."

When you rose free from the fetters of earth's life,
And with brightness saw on the white spread bed,

That pale lifeless form in stillness of strife,
And heard from loving friends, those words, "she is dead."

When that which once was you, lay extended there,
Whitely robed in bridal gown for the lonesome tomb,

With your folded hands clasping the lily so fair;
Which they clasped on your wedding day free from gloom.

Did a feeling of tender and wonderful sweetness,
A feeling of comfort or of ecstasy strange,

Come over your soul in that moment of quickness
From this rapid and most marvelous change.

The rare perfect days you so highly treasured,
We will ever feel you are hovering near;

We half expectant will listen with thoughts averted,
The sound of your foot-steps so gently to hear.

Maggie, you would tell us should the power be given you,
What to you is made so pleasant and beautifully clear,

That your love, as you are resting now, is as tender and true
As when you, so highly worshiped by us, were here.

Do you read all our sad and questioning longings,
Our quickening fear and our trembling awe?

For between the sleep of the dead and the thoughts of the living,
God fixeth His firm, but just and righteous law.

Dear Maggie, not yours is the power this law to amend,
Death is silent and dumb to us here;

For life is deaf, and to its meanings, not a thought will end,
And its messages as hard to endure, are perfectly clear.

Yet, soon amid flowers that will fade and decay,
White lilies with fragrance bearing happiness and peace,

May we meet in that blessed communion of day,
That will remain forever and never will cease.

A FRIEND.
