A Startling Sensation.

BY AN EX-DETECTIVE.
CHAPTER VI.

OREGON CITY, OREGON, Jan. 4, 1894.

(TO THE EDITOR: I presume you will not be surprised to receive the conclusion of my narrative dated at this place. I regret that circumstances prevent my going more fully into details, as the sequel, which will in the near future be written up by an associated press reporter, would then be more fully appreciated.)

Now, dear reader, I will close my part of this narrative in as few words as possible, and if I have failed to interest you, I can only ask that you patiently await the sequel.

In 1884, and about two weeks prior to the opening of this story, James Willis and Bert Mills both being absent, there appeared at the store of Mills & Willis a gentleman who, after inquiring for Mr. Willis, informed the head clerk that he had bought of Mr. Mills his interest in the establishment.

Of course this was a surprise to the chief, as he imagined that he enjoyed entire confidence of his employers, but as he showed a bill of sale together with a copy of the late inventory, everything seemed regular.

The clerks had hardly recovered from this surprise when another gentleman appeared upon the scenes and upon being informed that neither Mr. Mills nor Mr. Willis was to be found, he announced that he had purchased all the right, title and interest of Mr. Willis in the establishment, and he too produced the necessary paper.

Upon inquiry it was learned that neither Mr. Willis nor Mr. Mills had been seen on the streets of the village for several days. A visit to their respective residences revealed the fact that the women were also gone, and no traces of them could be found. They had all so completely covered up their tracks that the most clever of the villagers could get no clue. Even the gentlemen who had bought them out could only tell where they had met and transacted their business.

I am sorry that I cannot go into detail, as was my intention, in this very interesting part of my narrative, but circumstances prevent.

I had worked several months on the case when I induced Uncle Ned to divulge all the family secrets in his possession; and with this clue I was enabled to trace out the true situation. Secret meetings had been held between Bert Mills and Emma Lund-Willis, as also between James Willis and Edna Latimer-Mills. The result of these meetings was that an elopement was planned and carried to a successful termination.

So well were all these secrets kept that neither James nor Bert, Emma nor Edna, knew the intentions of the other.

By mutual consent and as a matter of business, an inventory of their stock was taken and under some pretext both left home, each entirely ignorant of the intentions of the other.

Bert went to Omaha, and met the gentleman to whom he sold. Emma met him in Chicago and from there they went to Florida, where they have been ever since.

James went to Kansas City, where he met his man. He and Edna met in Denver. From there they went to California, thence to Oregon.

The gentleman whom I chose to call James Willis and the lady whom I introduced to you as Edna Latimer are at this moment living in the state of Oregon, and are well known among the professions. Mr. Willis has found warm place in the hearts of the common people while Edna is loved by all who know her.

In justice to myself I will say that in order that these people might live on in peace and happiness, I sacrificed my time and resigned my situation, rather than to make public my discoveries. Would to God it was in my power to arrest further proceedings, but others have stepped in whose greed for gain has overshadowed every vestige of human principle. While I know that my words will be proved to be true, I would willingly accept the defunciation and be forever branded as a liar, if only these dear good people could be relieved from playing the principal parts in this drama, A Startling Sensation.

EX-DETECTIVE.

WATERLOO GARBA&E.

Once more we are in the town of influenza, mumps and scandal.

Items are plentiful, but hardly of the kind desirable for publication since the Mercury has been suspended.

The "Waterloo Literary Society" has been organized and on Thursday eve of each week, sundry orators inflict their carefully prepared address on a long suffering audience. A paper one of the many attractions. Editor Rice having told each individual town of his shortcomings, resign and now Prof. Irvine slings the quill—correspondence solicited. Stamp must accompany manuscript.

The good people of the town are holding a revival to revive the cold shrouded and gather in those who are on the wrong track. If all the wreck hereabout should turn from their wicked ways, the straight and narrow way would have to be broadened into a standard 64-foot road to accommodate the travel.

The spelling school has been suspended until the rush of business is over. Church each night, prayer meeting in the afternoon and a dance each alternate night, with debate Thursday evening and a general do nothing the rest of the week, leaves no time for spelling.

The new year was ushered in by a watch meeting, after which a ball was given in honor of the day—or night, rather. Both meeting and ball were great successes in their lines.

The new council are in the boat of state, Mayor Humphrey at the helm, Medley pulling stroke oar—but the mud fillet the streets until yet. O, our town fathers, we humbly beseech you to grant our little request and have a few planks scattered along the roads, which bear the misnomer of streets, especially for a few cables' length south of the postoffice, and your petitioner will ever pray.

A ratification meeting was held in the church Saturday evening. (Well, that may not be exactly the proper name for it, but not having Cal Jewepper's knack of naming things, we will let it slide at that.) Resolutions were passed sanctioning Brother Crank's letter to Uncle Patry, and copies will be sent to the Oregonian, Oregon Populist, and also one to Father Pennoyer. Won't he smile a slyly smile when he gets it, and say, "Well done, old Fat Chops, you are making yourself a name among the poor and thereby gathering votes unto yourself, to be used when you have a try for a seat in congress." Once upon a time a man drove out the money changers, but there is no account of his troubling his brain by writing letters of protest for a money lender. Nor could we sanction the administration of a man who vetoed the Bull Run bonds, but let Baker City get there, because why? he owned an interest therein; no? Baruum wrote, "The American people love to be humbugged." He made this mistake; it should have been Oregonians instead of Americans. Elder Wayback, can't you say a few words on this line? Just a trifle about "pollitics in the pulpit," Pennoyer's open letter to Grover, the "prince of schemers," "the crank of cranks," "the old man eloquent," "the greed of the workingman," "poverty vs. riches," or anything of that nature? Please have a try at it. Cal and I are not in partnership now; dissolved by mutual consent.

Bon jour,

C. RANK
