W. T. Peet, cashier of the First Na o'clock Tuesday forenoon at Corvallis from the effects of a dose of tincture o aconite taken by mistake. About 7 o'clock Mr. Peet went into Graham drug store. A bottle of blackberry brandy usually set behind the prescription counter. Mr. Peet, as was his custom, picked up a bottle that looked like the blackberry brandy, poured out an ounce and a half in a graduate, and drank it. "That taste funny," he remarked to Will Graham, the clerk, "it isn't the brandy is it?" Graham remarked it was all right, and drank about an ounce from the bottle. He immediately remarked that they had taken aconite. Doctors were cal led, and everything done possible to overcome the poison. The case of Mr. Peet proved ineffectual. Mr. Graham partly overcame the effect of the dose and the indications are that he will live. The fatal aconite, which had been used at the perscription counter, had been set down where the black berry brandy bottle usually set. Mr. Peet was one of the most prominent men of Corvallis, where he moved four or five years ago from Eugene. He some if they can get the building. Mr. was a man of excellent reputation, sagacity. He was a member of the
