

Lebanon Express.
H. Y. KIRKPATRICK,
 Editor - and - Proprietor

Cigarettes made of tea are becoming fashionable in society circles in Eastern cities, so say our exchanges.

Colonel Alley, of the Florence West, says: "It is a settled question that we go to Baker City, and if this paper is not disposed of to parties who will retain it here, there is nothing more certain than it will be moved to another town."

Francis Bellamy, who for nearly six years was one of the editors of the Youth's Companion, has been added to the editorial staff of the Ladies' Home Journal as one of Mr. Bok's principal associates. The new editor is a cousin of Edward Bellamy, author of "Looking Backward."

What republican orator in the coming election will "point with pride" to the achievements of the last republican legislature? The other fellow will do the pointing this time, but it will be the finger of scorn. There is no use to try it. The republicans cannot defend their last legislature nor their present governor.

The Eugene merchants can't get their freight by boat because a new sandbar has formed in the river near Junction, the stump puller is tied up to a stump, and the government has gone duck hunting. Will this great valley allow things to drift on this way for another twelve years?—Statesman.

In order to not allow "things to drift on in this way," the people of this state might elect another republican legislature that would do the enormous good(?) the last legislature has done.

Mrs. Burton Harrison has written for the March number of the Ladies' Home Journal an authoritative sketch of Sally Cary, to whom George Washington, in his private letters, clearly points as the passion of his life. Mrs. Harrison, who was Miss Constance Cary before her marriage, is a direct descendant of Sally Carey, as well as, on her mother's side, of the Fairfax family, into which the Southern beauty of Washington's day finally married.

The new Oregon senator is a disappointment to every one but himself. The free-silver element of the republican party claimed the honor of his election, but his first vote is registered with the goldbugs. The silverites gained nothing by McBride's election, for McBride is a goldbug; but the state was forced to exchange Dolph, a much abler man, for this very ordinary man. Dolph was a goldbug, but so is McBride. The only difference is that Dolph is a man who could and would have done the state much good, whereas McBride can do practically nothing but draw his salary. The only commendable thing that this legislature did was to adjourn. The dose that was forced down the throats of the people by this legislature has left a very bad taste in the mouth; a change of doctors is in order.

The morning papers lay on the seat beside him in the elevated train. He was reading with eagerness an awkward, crumpled little sheet. The printing of the paper was uncouth, for it looked as though half the letters were smashed. The impression of the type was dull and blurred. It was the weekly paper, printed in the little town where this prosperous, well-dressed New Yorker had been born and bred. Many a man who has carved his fortune in the city halls the little country paper every week as a welcome messenger. It tells how the crops are flourishing, how the fences are being whitewashed every spring, and, perhaps, once in a while there is a paragraph about the dear old mother, who has got into print by entertaining the sewing circle. And the prosperous New Yorker reads it entire, while the metropolitan sheets lie beside him unheeded.—New York Herald.

WHEN DEAFNESS IS USEFUL.
 Under Certain Circumstances, However, the Affliction is Expensive.
 "There is an advantage in being deaf, if you only know the exact time not to hear," said L. T. Salignac, of Philadelphia, to a Pittsburgh Dispatch man: "but the difficulty is to discriminate just when that time is. I have a friend who made, or, rather, tried to make, capital out of the misfortune nature had sent upon him, but he was continually making mistakes. Being a politician, as any of that kin knows, he met with plenty of instances where it was advisable not to hear. My friend ran for governor of Maryland once, and, while he was defeated, he was extremely popular and well known all over the state, from the urchin in the gutter to the millionaire in his palace."
 "I went fishing down in the Delaware bay one summer with him, and the boat made a landing at one of the towns on our way down. He was no sooner seen than a chorus greeted him from the wharf with a 'Hallo, guvner!' He acknowledged the compliment with a graceful tip of the hat. As we walked down the gang plank one fellow, a little more obtrusive than the rest, pushed his way up to the side of my friend and bellowed out, knowing the falling in his hearing: 'Say, guvner, old man, can't you loan me a quarter?'"
 "Of course, this was one of the occasions upon which my friend's auricular organs failed to perform their duty. He walked on as if he had not heard a word, while to my invitation to take a drink, given in a moderate tone of voice, he gave a ready assent. As we walked on a little farther, the man persisted. This time he came up to my friend and shouted at the top of his voice in his ear: 'Say, guvner, can't you loan me fifty cents?' My friend turned and, in a quiet, dignified manner, said, without a smile, as he tossed him the half-dollar: 'Confound your impertinence! I should have heard you the first time.'"

GRIZZLIES OF IDAHO.
 A Tact Agreement with Men in the Early Days Not to Molest Each Other.
 "Speaking of grizzly bears," said Judge Henry L. Warren to a New York Sun man, "we didn't look on these animals as particularly dangerous in Idaho when I was the United States district attorney of that territory. If a man attacked one at close quarters he sometimes got killed, but at a little distance not much more attention was paid to bears than if they had been so many hogs or cattle. Between human beings and the bears there seemed to be at that time a tacit agreement to let one another alone."
 "One of my hardest horseback trips led me through a wild region where I often saw bears. At one point the trail crossed an open valley, dotted with scattering big trees and clumps of underbrush, and on the further side wound up a steep mountain side through thick oak and pine woods. Coming down into that valley one day I saw a little way off on my right, five bears, two very large ones and three smaller ones, constituting possibly a family party. They were running about here and there nosing the ground, turning over stones and knocking to pieces rotten logs, hunting for mice and grubs. They apparently paid no attention to me as I rode past. My horse looked a little wild and fidgeted some at the sight of them, but I kept him in the trail without difficulty."
 "At another time a bear gave me considerable of a scare. I had just crossed this same valley and was just beginning to ascend the wooded heights beyond it. I had dismounted, and was leading my horse up the steep hillside when a bear broke out of the bushes a little behind me and came for me furiously, showing her teeth and growling. I stood still, expecting to be torn to pieces the next moment, from the determined way in which she came—it was a she bear—but she stopped just short of seizing me and turned to dash in the same way at my horse, and at that I dropped the bridle and made up the trail as fast as I could go. My horse, instead of turning back to run for life in the clear open ground of the valley, when she charged at him, made a detour up the hill and came back on the trail behind me. The bear, looking mighty ugly with her frothing mouth and bristling hair, kept up her demonstrations, directing them principally at my horse. You know how a horse, when thoroughly frightened, will seek the company and protection of humanity, and so, so all I could do to drive him away, my beast all the time kept right behind me with his nose at my shoulder, trembling with fear, but refusing to leave me, as the bear kept making dashes at us out of the bushes, sometimes from one side and sometimes from the other."
 "I didn't know then what I have learned from the habits of the animals since, that the bear was running a bluff on us and did not mean so much to harm us as to scare us away. She undoubtedly had cub concealed close by in the bushes and resorted to a common trick of the female bear to drive away intruders. Probably if I had stood my ground she would have tackled me and in that case it would have been all up with me. She followed us one hundred yards or so and then, seeming satisfied that she had got us fairly on the run, fell back into the bushes and watched us out of sight."

Why Bulls Hate a Red Hat.
 In the first place, says an English writer, red is a color to which cattle are unaccustomed, so that they naturally are supposed to be startled by its very novelty. Scientists show the sensation of red to be the complement of that of green, being induced by exactly opposite affects of the retina. If the eyes of cattle are concentrated on a similar principle to our own the continual contemplation of green, as in trees and herbage, must produce a state of retinal fatigue, predisposing to violent excitement of the retina immediately a red substance is presented to it.
