HANNA IN EVIDENCE.

The republican politicians seem to be singularly blind to the effect upon their capvass of Mark Hanna's prominence and the affiliations which he naturally seeks here in New York. This mushroom millionaire boss is organizing the McKinley campaign as he would organize an iron trust. He goes to Pierpont Morgan for aid and advice as to checking the silver movement which that eminent financier did more than any other man to create. He has installed Matt Quay and Powell Clayton as lieutenants and appointed an executive committee of rich and experienced financiers. All this renders unnecessary assure the claim that the republican party represents in this election all the honesty, patriotism and moral sentiment of the country.

Have the republican leaders forgotten the millionaire banquet—the "Belshazzar feast"—that defeated Blain in 1884 at the last moment. They retired Payne from their executive committee this year because he was obnoxious to the labor unions. Do they lack the discretion or the power to keep Hanna, with his money bags, his fat-friers and his professional corruptionists, out of sight as an offense to the moral sentiment and the political sense of the community.

The combination that is directing the McKinley campaign is really working effectively for Bryan. Republicans who know what is operating on the minds of the people must be conscious of this fact.—N. Y. World.

The dispatches never tell where Hanna, McKinley's manager, has a kind word for the farmer. He never has any. He consorts with millionaire politicians and frequents the dens of Wall street. Never before in the history of American politics, have the lines been so plainly drawn between the rich man and his poor neighbor. McKinley, notwithstanding his great personal worth, is forced to become the candidate of the moneyed aristocracy, while Bryan is the popular and eloquent defender of the masses. Countless thousands of gold, hundreds of banks, hoards of unscrupulous political managers, with all their combined influences, are seeking to defeat the champion of the American workmen. This is a desperat struggle. The enemies of the people are no longer trying to hide their work, but are openly making a bold and desperate attempt to trample upon the dearest interest of the masses. This is not a plitcal fight, but a fight of the combination of wealth against the people. Let the farmer, the mechanic and laborer vote for his home, his family, his country. Let Hanna and his republican-democratic hoodlers be forever beaten. Let the people, who made this country by their industry, keep it by their votes.

Our republican friends seem much horrified at the undignified canvass that Bryan is making, and proclaim that McKinley will make no speeches, but will be in all things dignified, whatever that may mean. A few brief speeches to enthusiastic gatherings along the route are enough to outrage republican ideas of propriety, but the wholesale contribution of thousands of dollars from Wall street to help Hanna buy the presidency for McKinley, does not offend their ideas of decency. There is nothing improper in Bryan speaking to people if they want to hear him, but there is something criminal as well as improper in Hanna's scheme to raise two or three million dollars to "educate" the masses. McKinley, who is an honorable man, must often blush at the words of his manager Hanna.

INASMUCH as both of the opposing parties in Alabama are equally in favor of the free coinage of silver, it might be possible for either side to win a victory at the polls without the result having any significance. But if the democratic ticket has gained an increased honest vote, which seems to be the case, the result is highly significant. The fusion between republicans and populists is firmer and stronger in Alabama than in any other Southern state, and the hostility between populists and democrats is as bitter as it is in Texas. In spite of these adverse influences, the election shows that the democratic ticket has won back any number of populist voters, then it is only reasonable to infer that the same result may be expected in other Southern states. From this point of view the Alabama election would indicate a solid South for Bryan, with the possible exception of some of the border states where the race question is not a factor.—N. Y. World.

"THREE state conventions, the democratic, populist and free-silver republicans, meeting in state convention in Ellensburg, send congratulations, and promise you the electoral vote of the state."

This is the telegram received by Bryan from Washington. The people are falling in line for the people candidate. They have had their eyes open to the plans of Hanna and his helpers, the Wall street millionaires. McKinley is a very good man, but he is in awfully bad company. He would naturally make a good run, but the people have no confidence in his backers—the trusts, combines and monopolies. Many people would not mind having McKinley for president, but they do not want Hanna.

THE contest for Tongue's seat has been formally begun. A hard fight will be made. The result will depend largely upon the political complexion of the house of representatives. The Albany Herald is "shocked" at the outrageous charges made against Tongue's partisans. Doubtless many of these charges are groundless, but due allowance must be made for the man who believes he has been counted out by the wholesale corruption of Siwash votes.

BRYAN'S New York address was a masterly effort. It was good to read as well as good to listen to. He shows himself to be a true patriot with the real interests of the people at heart. He would protect the poor as well as the rich and insure to every man peaceable enjoyment of the fruit of his labor. What is more—he would give the poor man a chance to lay up something for himself, to educate his children and be happy. He has no special liking for greedy and soulless corporations.

THE republicans, amazed at the successful fusion of the free silver elements in all parties, are trying their best to bring discord among the Bryan supporters. They court fusion with Southern populists to beat the democrats, but denounce fusion between democrats and western populists. The republicans were never consistent in but one thing, to thwart the people's will. Sensible populists will not let the republican scheme turn them from the path of duty.

No argument is too low for Hanna and his subsidized press to wage. He is trying to make the soldier vote solid for McKinley. In doing so, he does not attempt to prove that free silver will be bad for the country at large, but that it will be bad for the pensioner in particular, by decreasing the value of his pension. Hanna is making a fearful mixture of love of country and love of self.

CLEVELAND used to be the representative of all the republicans despised, that was when he was on the side of the people. Now he is a great statesman. He has recently become the friend of monopolies, trusts and combines.
