Peffer's whiskers will adorn the senate chamber no more after the 4th of March. It is to be hoped that the same may be said about Mitchell's.—Dispatch.

The new governor of Colorado outdid Jefferson in simplicity on his inaugural day. He walked. At the conclusion of the ceremonies it was announced that the whole affair cost less than five dollars.

One of the first acts of Gov. Black, of New York, was to establish a permanent board to regulate the uniforms of the state military officers, but he reserves the right to veto what the board decides on. It is understood that this is a hit at the profusion of gold lace and feathers.

An exchange says: "The American people are patient, long-suffering and slow to change, but it is our opinion that they begin to feel that as to senatorial elections by legislatures 'patience has ceased to be a virtue,' and they will demand that this prerogative be placed in their own hands, where it rightly belongs."

The democrats in the legislature owe Senator Mitchell nothing. He should look to his federal office-holding contingent, which he carried over into the McKinley ranks, for assistance. The democrats in the legislature got there in spite of their opposition. They owe it to their party and their constituents to use all honorable means to secure his defeat.—Dispatch.

Members of the Washington legislature are true bimetalists. They talk for silver, but vote for gold.—Oregonian.

The above has reference to the election of Turner as U. S. senator from Washington, that gentleman being interested in a valuable gold mine. However, it is a well known fact that nearly all gold miners in this country are in favor of free coinage of silver.

Senator Mitchell no doubt realizes the fact that Oregon has grown too big for him to carry in his vest pocket any longer. During his 18 years of residence in Washington things have changed somewhat in Oregon and the population is too large and independent for any man's ownership. Let the senator come home and get acquainted with the new order of things.—Dispatch.

Big sleeves blocked an important Paris thoroughfare the other day. A young woman was saffling down the Rue Richelieu by the Bibliotheque Nationale, taking up most of the sidewalk, when a polite old gentleman, to make room for her, stepped into the street directly in front of a passing cab. The driver pulled his horse up to avoid running over him, when the beast fell down, and in two minutes there was a solid block of omnibuses, cabs, bicycles, and delivery carts, filling the street for over an hour.

A drummer passed himself off for Bryan along a Georgia railroad the other day, making speeches from the rear platform, shaking hands, etc. The rumor got abroad that Bryan was really on board the train, and when the train pulled in at a station the crowd would yell for Bryan, out stepped the drummer and gave them a speech. It all passed off well till the train reached Cartersville, where the crowd caught on and greeted the festive commercial tourist with a salvo of eggs. Then he got mad and wanted to lick somebody.—Ex.

Ripans Tablets.
Ripans Tablets cure croup.

A common idea among can-sucking dudes, and, unfortunately, among a higher class of the residents of big cities, is that the farmers throughout the country are not very intellectual. On the contrary, it is a great mistake to suppose that nature capped the farmer's spinal column with a head for no other purpose than to support a pair of ears with which to hear the dinner horn. In actual labor the head is just as useful as the hands, and the great majority of farmers fully realize and take advantage of this fact. The brain is the greatest of labor saving, as well as labor directing, instruments.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Mayor Foley's Able Address.

An important feature of the program of the teachers' institute, last Friday evening, was an address by Mayor Foley. That his audience appreciated it highly, was shown by the close attention given. For the benefit of those among our readers who could not attend, we publish it in full, as follows:

THE ADDRESS.

Ladies and Gentlemen of the Teachers' Institute:

The people of Lebanon deem it an honor, as well as a pleasure, to welcome you in our midst. We are not unmindful of the dignity and usefulness of your profession. We know that to your care is left the training of the minds of the future citizens and voters of the nation. Where every man has the right of suffrage, no possible voter should be permitted to reach the voting age ignorant of the fundamental principles of our government. The only way to prevent this misfortune is to educate the youth of the land.

Now, to educate, we must have competent teachers. At a glance, the dullest intellect can see the great importance of duty that is laid upon you.

It is hardly necessary for me to suggest to you how important education is to a man in his daily life. Success and failure on all sides have long ago impressed this fact upon you.

Your very presence here tonight proves that you do not think that you have reached a state of perfection. You are here, if I am correctly informed, for the purpose of learning, in order that you may better qualified to pursue your noble calling. I have thought that the true secret of teaching was told in the classic school of Athens, many hundred years ago, when the great Socrates said to his pupils: "Know thyself." Indeed, this knowledge is as essential as book knowledge.

The two together, with a thorough knowledge of the pupils, make the good teacher. Every pill-peddler is not a true physician; neither is every book-worm a good teacher. The work of the teacher is to mould and form the mind, to settle in his pupil good habits and the principles of virtue, and give him little by little a knowledge of mankind, and instill into him a love and veneration for what is excellent and praiseworthy; and in the prosecution of it, to give him vigor, activity and industry. The studies set before him should be such as to exercise his faculties and employ his time, keeping him from idleness. Teach application, and accustom him to take pains, and to give him an idea of what his own industry may accomplish.

It is not to be expected that every boy can be made an accomplished orator and logician, or become a master of metaphysics, natural philosophy or mathematics, though something of each of these is to be taught him. But of good breeding, knowledge of the world, virtue, industry and love of reputation, he cannot have too much. And if he have these, he will not long want what he needs or desires of the others. And since it cannot be hoped that he should have time and strength to learn all things, most pains should be taken about that which is most necessary, and that principally taught which will be of most frequent use to him in the world.

"How dear to my heart are the scenes of my childhood,
When fond recollection presents them to view."

These lines remind me of my boyhood days and how dearly I loved my lady teacher. And the fact is, I have not gotten entirely over admiring a pretty school-ma'am even yet.

Our little city has a fine class of teachers, and our citizens appreciate the good work done. In fact, Lebanon has always been regarded as a seat of learning. It was a common saying in pioneer days that every man who achieved greatness in Oregon, either got his start in Yamhill county or his education at the Santiam academy. (I here wish to remark parenthetically that I got my start in Yamhill county.) The Santiam academy has done a noble work, and I hope its usefulness will increase.

We, as citizens of Lebanon, feel a great interest in this institute. Its success means better teaching next year and the years to come.

In conclusion, ladies and gentlemen of the teachers' institute, I again bid you a cordial welcome to our city, and extend to you the hospitality of its citizens. We hope to make your visit so pleasant that you will be willing to come amongst us some future occasion.

Card of Thanks.

We wish to extend our heartfelt thanks to the kind friends who so nobly assisted us during the sickness and burial of our beloved mother, and for their sympathy in this, our sad bereavement.

MR. and MRS. C. R. LOVEALL.

GRASS ON A HOG.

A Museum Man's Scheme for Gulling the Public.

The Porter Converted Into a Sort of Parasitizing Lawn—Bright Green Blades Where Urinals Ought to Grow.

For the insignificant sum of ten cents the curiously inclined might have had the privilege of seeing recently in a little museum way down in the French quarter no less a curio than a hog sporting a complete and bona fide crop of grass all over his body "in de place whar de ha'r ought to grow."

This sounds like the most preposterous thing on record, writes a correspondent of the Philadelphia Times, and so your correspondent conceived it to be until he came to the point of sacrificing a dime on the altar of his incredulity, and beheld with his own eyes the wonder. The animal appeared to be a well-grown nine or ten-months' shoot of the Essex breed, with the usual broad back, chubby neck and short legs, but from the tip of his nose to the end of his tail he was bristling with as perfect fresh green grass as the finest lawn mixture is warranted to produce.

The exhibitor from time to time clipped a stray bit of grass from the hog's abundant crop and passed it around for inspection. I am willing to testify on oath that it was the genuine article and no mistake, and the more I gazed the more the wonder grew that one short hog should wear so strange a hue, till finally my curiosity got the better of my purse strings and I clipped in with some other fellows and got the man to let us on to the fake.

"Easy enough explained," said the exhibitor, as he began to spray the animated grass plot with a small rubber bulb which he held constantly in his hand. "Just step behind here and take a close look at the hog. Mind how you handle him, though, or you may break him all up. Seems to be a pretty good thickener of earth 'twixt him and the grass, don't there? Yes. Well, that's just it. Grass grows in dirt and nowhere else, so all you've got to do is to get enough of it to stick to a hog and he'll make you about as good a lawn as you'd find anywhere almost."

"That's straight so far as it goes, but, of course, there is a good deal more to it before you can work up such an article as this here. In the first place you have got to get the right kind of a hog. I generally use a Berkshire or an Essex, because they are good and broad and you can feed 'em up to be pretty laxy. This is necessary, of course, as a frisky hog is not liable to hold mud or water either for a long time. The next step is to get the right kind of soil."

"Now, I always use dirt collected from ant hills, but this is an old dodge borrowed from the East Indian jugglers, who can make a mango sprout and grow six or seven feet in as many minutes. Scientists say that it is the formic acid in earth which causes seed to burst and the germ to develop when placed therein, and this acid is freely generated by the ant. Pour a cupful of hot water over a handful of the insects and it will become as sour as vinegar."

"Of course it is easy enough to get a layer of soil about an inch thick caiked up on a hog, and a little training will teach him to keep it there all right. I put a ring in this fellow's nose and tie him up short so that he can't skirnish around, and that's about all. I plant my seed, which sprout and come up in about a week's time, for I haven't quite gotten up to the jugglers' minute performances yet. So there's your hog as big as life and as green as grass."

"I have several hogs which I use at different times, as it would not do to keep one with his pores stopped up too long. Sometimes, too, I vary the monotony by planting small, low-growing flowers instead of grass, and once I rigged up a vagary with a sprig of amilax for the tall, little coles plants making the stars and stripes on either side, and a razor-back of pansies running between. But that did not go very well. The fake was too obvious, and I lost trade by it. Since then I have confined myself almost entirely to grass, which seems to go somehow, perhaps owing to the general greenness of the public."

Queen Victoria's Growing Family.

Knowledge of the interesting fact that within the current year the queen expects to have the number of her great-grandchildren increased by four suggests that at the rapid rate at which they are increasing her majesty may expect to see the number of her direct descendants exceed one hundred. Her children were ten in number. The grandchildren up to date are thirty-five. The latter are now growing up and marrying off, and their offspring, constituting the fourth generation, will, of course, show a greatly accelerated ratio of increase—say as thirty-five is to ten. The royal mothers-expected this year are the duchess of York, the empress of Russia, and the two daughters of the duke of Edinburgh, the crown princess of Roumania and the duchess of Hesse-Darmstadt.

Fowls in France.

It is stated that there are in France 45,000,000 of hens, which, at an average price of 2 francs 30 centimes per head, represent a value of 112,500,000 and 5,000 francs. One-fifth of the stock is annually consumed as food, and is sold for about 22,500,000 francs. Two million of cocks, worth 5,000,000 francs, are sold as food. The number of laying hens is put down at 35,000,000, and the annual value of their eggs is 150,000,000 francs. A million francs equals $200,000.

She Saw the Battle of Waterloo.

There has just died in Whitechapel a Mrs. Todd, who was present at the battle of Waterloo. She was then only ten years old, but vividly remembered to her dying day many of the scenes of carnage. Her mother was a woman employed to work for the army. Her father was a British soldier and he was killed near the tent in which the girl and her mother were.
