GALVESTON RUINED BY A TIDAL WAVE.

On the night of the 20th a tidal wave struck the breakwater at Galveston and broke away a portion of the sea wall and inundated the city. During the terrific storm that raged in the bay a ship collided with the railroad bridge that connects the city with the mainland and all communication was shut off.

The most terrible results are feared as the storm has been fearful throughout the Gulf and all the cities in that section have suffered from the elements.

HARVEST.

Harvest is in full blast and all week the streets of Ione are dull, except about train time in the evening when the farmers are here looking for harvest hands. Last Sunday the town awakened up and looked like the Saturday auction days of last fall, for the farmers were in by the shoals buying supplies, eating a dish of ice cream, drinking a little "near beer" and incidentally patronizing the moving picture show at five o'clock, as a relief to the tired frames that labor so hard all the week.

The wheat is coming in greater quantities than has been expected altho' in some quarters there is a report of smaller harvest than looked for. Mr. Bortzer reported yesterday that his poorest piece of wheat was a disappointment, but that he surely would do much better on the remainder. Mr. Knappenberg says the wheat on the Woolery home ranch, which he has rented, will give him a good return and so the good word is passed about.

A little later it is reported we are to have some Saturday auctions here and so the farmers are beginning to cull out what stock they want to sell and prepare for those days.

We are in receipt of an "At Home" card at their home at Clackamas Oregon, of Rev. J. L. Jones and his bride nee Miss Mary E. Davis of Carmel, Pa. The marriage took place at the home of Dr. A. Frank Ferris, who officiated on July 19th at his home in Sheridan Oregon.

Mr. Jones is well and favorably known in Ione country, having been resident Pastor of the Congregational church at this place for five years. He became acquainted with his present wife through his friendship with Rev. Ferris, she having been a life long friend of Mr. Ferris.

The good wishes of this community follow Rev. Jones and his wife in their new home and trust that life will have the best of good things in store for them.

All scrappers.

Callahan—Oh, I want to get a book to put the photographs of all my relatives in. Oh, I think this man will do.

Clerk—But that isn't a family album, sir; that is a scrapbook.

Callahan—Oh, that's all right, young man; all my relatives are scrappers.—Pack.

Looking Backward.

"Well, doctor, do you think it is anything serious?"

"Oh, not at all! It is merely a boil on the back of your neck, but I would advise you to keep your eye on it."—Hra.

A TOOTH FOR A TOOTH.

The Forcefulness of Native Customs in Morocco.

In Morocco, the Baled-el-Maghrab (the land of the setting sun of the Arabs), the Lex Tallonis is as much an integral part of the social system as are life and death. The Moors, it may be said, are frankly brutal. They have a certain rude code of honor to which they adhere when convenient, but among themselves they devise every possible excuse for not fulfilling engagements with the ghaour.

On the other hand, they are extremely punctilious in exacting full measure from Europeans with whom they have dealings, and many stories might be told showing how Moorish judges mete out justice to their own people to the detriment of the alien.

For instance, it is not very long since that a British subject riding through the Soko (or market place) at Marashah had the ill fortune to push against a half blind old woman, who, falling to the ground, broke off two of her front teeth.

The Englishman promptly offered compensation. It was refused, and the injured woman before the local caid demanded that her innocent aggressor should have two teeth knocked out in retribution for her injury.

Protest followed on protest against this extortion until finally the matter was carried to the sultan himself.

That potentate (and this instance is given to show the forcefulness of native custom) begged the Englishman to comply with the old woman's demand and publicly sacrifice his factors, in return for which obligation he granted him concessions which have made that English merchant and his family foremost among the wealthy foreigners in Morocco.—London Spectator.
