As the buzzing of the threshing machine stops, the sewing machine takes its place and the children are being prepared for school.

All the people of the Old World are excited over air ships and now look out for a new kind of a "gitis" that has its seat of settlement in the land of the neck that is craned watching the ships.

When many rival roads fight to get into a country, there surely must be something there of great value. The discovered wealth of Central Oregon is enormous and the ABC of development, in that land, has not yet been learned.

The outlook is bad for the winter in the way of hay, in these parts and by next spring cattle will be high. The grain this year had such a short stem that the straw stacks are small. Alfalfa is good, however, and a large yield.

Candon is to be congratulated upon its thinking and progressive School Board. They have added two years of Normal Course to their High School and are one of, if not the first, in the State to try and supply a need the legislature failed to provide for.

The coming Fair at Pendleton should be now the chief subject of attention in this county as no other one thing is of such benefit to a people as a county Fair. It brings together the farmers, merchants and working people and shows each the development that the county has made since the year before. The common proprietorship of all people in the county makes a brotherly feeling of pride in that union ownership and all return home the better for having gone and taken part.

It begins to feel like fall and lucky the people who are in condition to approach the winter season without worry. We in this open climate cannot estimate what it means in the Dakotas, Montana, British Columbia and the rest of the northern wheat lands. There for months the snow is piled high and the cattle die for cold, while here enough to buy fuel, that if the amount was spent here it would entirely care for the family wants for the winter. And in here in Morrow county we plow most all winter.

The man who fails to go to a Fair this fall and take his family is doing wrong as there are two close at hand, our own county Fair at Pendleton and the county Fair at The Dalles. There is no other one thing that will aid the farmer more for the small amount of money invested than a visit to these gatherings and a look at the exhibits of cattle and grain, while the wife gets many new ideas and returns home rested by the trip and change of thought.

The Oregon State Fair will be held at Salem on September 13 to 18, and every person who can should attend it at least for one or two days. It is the leading agricultural exposition of the Pacific Northwest and is becoming greater each year. It will be a very close second to the A. Y. P. exposition now being held at Seattle—not so large, of course, but the quality of many of the exhibits will be even better than at the Seattle show.

The campground at the Oregon State Fair, Salem, is in readiness for the great number of campers that will occupy spaces thereon during the forty eighth annual fair which will be held on September 13 to 18, 1909. Albert Tozier is superintendent of the camping quarters and he expects that the tented city will be larger than ever this time. Massive oak trees form a nice grove on the camping quarters, which makes it an attractive place to enjoy a week's outing away from one's home, whether it be in the city or country. An evening scene on the camp ground is a most pleasant one generally, especially when the campfires are burning around which are assembled groups of people engaging in social converse and games interspersed with music.
