HARRIMAN IS DEAD

Victor in financial battles leaves Grim Reaper. Hand remained clear to last

George Parsons, the last survivor of the Hanover family, died at 4:00 a.m. today, ending a period of ill health. The death of Mr. Harriman was announced by the family.

The body of the late Mr. Harriman will lie in state at the family home in New York until the funeral services are held this afternoon. The funeral will be attended by many friends and family members.

Herbert L. Harriman, the man who led the American railroad industry for over 50 years, was born in New York City on November 18, 1865. He was the son of Henry L. Harriman, one of the wealthiest men in America.

Harriman was a key figure in the world of railroading and played a major role in shaping the industry. He was instrumental in the formation of the Union Pacific Railroad and the Southern Pacific Railroad. He was also a major force in the development of the railroads in the western United States.

Harriman was known for his striking personality and his ability to get things done. He was a forceful and decisive leader who was not afraid to make difficult decisions. He was also a man of great personal wealth, and his influence was felt throughout the country.

Harriman died at the age of 92, leaving behind a legacy that will be remembered for generations to come. His contributions to the railroading industry and his impact on American society will continue to be felt for years to come.

HARRIMAN'S SUCCESSAL

Edward Henry Harriman was the last of his line, and his death leaves a vacuum in the leadership of the railroad industry. However, the legacy of Harriman will continue to live on, as his contributions and influence will be remembered for years to come.
