Wednesday's Oregonian contains the story of the tragic death of Weldon Darling, a young man who was born and raised in Condon. Darling was riding in an automobile with a young woman and turned the wheel of his car to make room for a passing machine. The road was slippery from a rain and the car skidded until it turned directly around. The wrench of its stopping was so great that the car turned over and went down into a gulch coming to rest upright. The young lady was thrown out when the brakes were set and sustained a few bruises. Darling was crushed under the steering wheel and lived only a few minutes.
Darling married a popular and wealthy young Portland lady several years ago but recently they had become estranged and were living apart. He was the son of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Darling, pioneer citizens of Condon. After going to Portland to make his home, Mr. Darling engaged in the insurance business. Later he owned the cigar and news stand in the Wells-Fargo building and at the time of his death he was in the employ of the Blake-McFall Paper Co. L. K. Harlan, of The Herald, was well acquainted with him.

FOR PRINCIPLE.
They went to war against a preamble. On this question of principle they, while actual suffering was as yet afar off, raised their flag against a power to which, for purposes of foreign conquest and subjugation, Rome in the height of her glory is not to be compared; a power which has dotted the whole globe with her possessions and military posts, whose morning drumbeat, following the sun and keeping company with the hours, circles the earth daily with one continuous and unbroken strain of the martial airs of England. —From Daniel Webster's Tribute to Revolutionary Fathers.

AMBITION.
Ambition is Inspiration.—Horace Davis.

If I shoot at the sun I may hit a star.—P. T. Barnum.

There is nothing noble in being superior to some other man.

The true nobility is in being superior to your previous self.—Hindu Saying.

Earnestness is the path to immortality, thoughtlessness the path to death.—Buddha.

Scarcely any attempt is entirely a failure; scarcely any theory, the result of a steady thought, is altogether false, and no tempting form of error is without some charm of truth. Not only so, but every failure is a step to success. Every detection of what is false directs to the truth, and every trial abates some tempting form of error.—Mary A. Livermore.
