

IN THE 'LONESOME LANDS.'
(With apologies to Bower for the confiscated title.)

There's a loneliness in the Lonesome Lands,
Where the bones of man in unmarked graves do lie;
There's a stillness as of the desert sands
And the desolate silence of a desert sky.

Where campfires burn in the mountain heights,
At night by the old, old trail:
Where the fir and pine, their bows atwain,
Sway in the autumn gale.

Where from the crests of the lonely Buttes,
The curlew calls and thrills,
And grey coyotes wail to the moon,
From the lone deserted hills.

But the dreamer dreams of another scene,
Which the future days shall see;
When the call of the range shall surely change,
And another call shall be.

When the hand of man the desert land will till,
Fields of grain on the plain and vineyards on the hill,
No more shall the coyotes wail;
No more will the curlew call and thrill.

Children shall play by the running rills,
When to the days dead is the loneliness fled
From the lonely sands of the Lonesome Lands
"And the shepherds gone from the hills."

THE photographer was stationed at the most northern of the three arched portals constituting the main western entrance to the palace and turned his camera to the north. The huge columns adorning this entrance are of imitation Siena and are in warm contrast with the creamish gray of the "Travertine" plaster of which the walls are composed. The friezes at the base of the columns and the spandrels above the archways of the vestibule are the work of the sculptor Haig Patigian. In architectural style the Palace of Machinery is early Roman. The architect is Clarence R. Ward of San Francisco.

POVERTY.
It is wonderful what Tolstoy has done. He could do no more. For a nobleman, with the most aristocratic ancestry, to refuse to be supported in idleness, to insist upon working with his own hands and to share as much as possible the hardship and toil of a peasant class which but recently was a slave class is the greatest thing he could do. But it is impossible for him to share their poverty, for poverty is not the lack of things; it is the fear and the dread of want.—W. D. Howells.
