HARRY LANE

In the passing of Senator Harry Lane Oregon has lost a much beloved and respected citizen.

Born of an illustrious pioneer family, standing high in the profession of his choice, ranking a way above the mediocre in scientific pursuits, called by his city and state to fill responsible positions of public trust, he remained always the same quaint, common, everyday, brilliant, lovable, fighting Harry Lane, the same today as yesterday, the friend and associate of the learned and powerful, the friend and defender of the ignorant and weak. Kipling's lines well described him for he could "talk with crowds and keep his virtue, and walk with kings nor lose the common touch."

As a man he was faithful, generous, kindly—devoted to what he believed to be right; aggressively opposed to what he believed to be wrong, and as a public official he was the same. He was no Jekyll-Hyde man—he was just Harry Lane wherever he happened to be.

The writer recalls a speech he heard Senator Lane deliver at Eugene, during the campaign of 1912, while making his successful campaign for the United States senate. Taking his place on the platform and speaking in an ordinary, conversational tone, he said: "Friends, I am a candidate for the United States senate. I am asking your votes for this high office not because I am handsome, for I know that I am not; not because I think I am more able or gifted or eloquent than plenty of other men for I am not; but, ladies and gentlemen, I am asking you to elect me to the United States senate because I know that I am honest and I believe that honest men are needed in that body. If you elect me I promise you that I will never throw you down."

Lane carried that message to the common people of every county in the state, traveling alone, in an old automobile, from county to county, almost from farm to farm and, without newspaper support and in the face of bitter political opposition he won, hands down. The people of Oregon took Harry Lane at his word and he didn't "throw them down."

In the closing days of the last session of congress Senator Lane took a position against the president and against an almost solid congressional body and he stood by his guns in the face of all opposition because he believed his position was right and that it was the position of the mass of the people of his state—the people whom he represented—and he wouldn't "throw them down, he would die first, because he was built that way—because he was Harry Lane.

Whether or not his position was wise, considered as a political or statecraft proposition, need not now be considered. It was the position he believed to be right and he maintained it against all odds. He knew full well the bitterness of the attacks his action would bring upon him—the poison of the venom that would be directed against him—but he stood pat and, believing that he was representing the wishes of the plain people of Oregon, in this last and most dramatic action of his public life, he made good his promise—he refused to "throw them down."

A BUSINESS PROPOSITION

The Herald is this week sending out statements of account to all subscribers whose accounts are shown by our books to be one year in arrears.

This is being done purely as a business proposition just as merchants, bankers, blacksmiths, doctors and other business and professional men send out courteous requests for the settlement of accounts for merchandise furnished or services rendered which are overdue.

The newspaper subscription business differs from most other lines of business in which credit is extended in that the amount of a year's subscription is so small that it is more easily overlooked and neglected than are many other accounts. In the aggregate, however, these small accounts become of considerable importance to the publisher when you stop to think that 1000 of them amount to the tidy sum of $1500., a bunch of coin that would fit nicely into many vacant places around the average country print shop.

The Herald believes that it is because of the smallness of these accounts that they are so frequently overlooked not because people do not expect to pay their newspaper bills as they do their other obligations.

If you receive a statement and it appears to be correct we will appreciate your remittance in settlement of the same. Should it appear incorrect please call at this office or write us at once and we will cheerfully correct any error that is apparent.

LEXINGTON ITEMS

Mrs. Minnie Broadley who has been staying with her mother, Mrs. J. T. McMillan, and sending her children to school, left on Saturday morning for her home in Idaho.

The graduating exercises were held at the Lexington school auditorium, Friday, May 25. Mr. Maples of The Dalles gave the address of the evening. The exercises seemed different in a way as the graduates all wore the regular graduating black caps and gowns. Misses Baber, Fern, Ballad, three of our teachers left for their respective homes on Saturday morning. A dance was given Friday night after the graduating exercises. The names of the graduates for the class of 1917 were Cecil Scott, Leona Leach, Edna Bauman, Nettie Doris and Merle Saxe.

Mrs. Iona Gilbreath of Dayton, Wash., and little son, are visiting her parents Mr. and Mrs. J. M. White and relatives. They expect to be here about a week. Mrs. Gilbreath has to be at home by next Tuesday as she is on the registration board.

Mrs. Myrtle Gentry and children of Umatilla are visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Munkers and other relatives.

Mr. and Mrs. James Pointer of Eugene motored here in their Chevrolet car Friday and are visiting relatives.

Mrs. Bob Clark visited in Lexington with friends a couple of days. She came to attend the graduating exercises.

March White, one of Lexington's most patriotic citizens, walks along the streets these days with a broad smile because his daughter, Iona, is here visiting and his children are all here now.

Jas Stockard and wife are preparing for a six weeks visit back in Missouri. They have engaged Mr. Schenech to look after things in their absence.

Word was received here that E. C. Miller of north of Lexington who has been visiting relatives in Illinois, will return soon bringing his bride. Congratulations.

Mr. and Mrs. Lee Reaney went to Portland Monday for a visit.

Mrs. Hall and son who have been working at Helms returned to her home in Portland Monday.

Mrs. Breshears, our local postmistress, is enjoying a visit this week from her sister, Mrs. Mulligan of Walla Walla.

Mr. Barton, one of our teachers, left Tuesday morning for Portland.

Mrs. Geo. Peck was taken suddenly ill Sunday and was taken to the hospital at Pendleton, Oregon.

Jess Hall who works a number of teams on the road, had a runaway Monday and his teams ran into the fence cutting some of them rather badly with the wire.

NOTICE—During my absence in the east my practice will be looked after by Dr. H. T. Allison. Dr. N. E. Winnard. 11f.
