MINOR & COMPANY

Heppner, Oregon

Heppner Property Advances in Value

Mike Roberts, who has been making some extensive improvements on his Main and Willow street properties the past year, placed an estimate of some $4000 on the same the other day. A day or two later he raised the amount to $7000. The reason for such rapid advance in Mr. Roberts holdings is, he says, that after making the first estimate he discovered that he had two or three yards of lath to put on and there being no professional lather in town he had to do the work himself and after wrestling with the job for an hour or so he concluded it was worth all of $3000. If he ever gets the job finished the Herald will report how many finger nails he lost and how many blood blisters he acquired during the operation.

Morrow county will make her quota in the big Red Cross drive this week in spite of the rain and mud which has interfered with the work to a considerable extent.

H. J. Griffith, superintendent of the Northwest Bank Equipment Co., is here this week installing the furniture and fixtures in the new First National Bank building.

John Kilkenny, Jr., is home from the U. of O. to spend the holidays with his parents.

Rev. Turner McDonald, who has been minister at the Christian church for several years, and tendered his resignation recently, expects to leave Heppner with his family about the first of the year for some point on the coast where they will locate. The change is being made on account of Mrs. McDonald's health. Many warm friends made during their residence here will regret their departure.

True Conservationists

The boys up at the Shepherds' Home ranch, of which Art Minor is the owner, have organized a conservation club for the purpose of helping to win the war. They not only observe a wheatless day and a meatless day each week but a workless day as well. Mac Smith says that they find the workless day works in fine with the wheatless and meatless days because when they don't work they can't eat—so much—and when they don't eat much they can't work so hard and thus make themselves hungry again and eager to devour the wheat and meat they had conserved on the wheatless and meatless days. Mac has it all figured out so that it looks good to him but just how it will appear to C. A., who is now conserving down in Portland, deponent sayeth not.

The Christmas Spirit

"Good-will to men"

As Christmas is ushered in this year we are at war—to enforce a righteous peace coupled with justice.

We are allied with the cause of right. We are fighting for justice that recognizes the individual rights of man—justice that will ever preclude a repetition of this world disaster. This is the spirit of America today—it is with our boys "somewhere in France"; with our sailors upon the high seas; with our great national army mobilized in the cantonments; with us at home—in our labors, our duties and our sacrifices.

May we ever maintain this spirit.
