NEWSPAPERS AND POLITICIANS

Here is how the Reedsport Courier hands it to the numerous candidates who have flooded its office with long-winded platitudes and fulsome auto-biographies:

"They never think of enclosing a check to the editor and having their announcements published as a paid advertisement. That would take all of the camouflage out of the matter, although it would be the only honest way of getting their names before the public, and if they can not be honest, square and equitable before they are elected, what can be expected of them after election?"

"Any person, class or society would impose upon the country newspapers at the present time at least, when they are doing everything they possibly can toward helping the Government win the war, by giving unlimited space in their columns for the purpose of advertising everything worthy to that end, absolutely free, are not worthy of consideration by the public, no matter what party they are affiliated with."

While all the Courier says about the politician may be true it is hardly fair to lay all the blame for existing conditions as between politicians and newspapers at the office-seeker's door. Office-seekers are generally out to win some well-salaried office or some office that will serve as a stepping-stone to some well-salaried office as a strictly selfish business proposition, and it is natural that they figure on putting the deal over at as small an expenditure of money as is possible and at the same time keep themselves in good standing in the community. Of course, when an office-seeker starts out to make a campaign of the state in search of votes he finds that certain items of his expenses must be paid for. Among these items may be mentioned railway fare, hotel bills, auto-hire, gasoline, cigars, whiskey, laundry, etc. How far does anyone suppose a politician would get if he started out to make a statewide campaign with the deliberate intention of getting from 95 per cent to 100 per cent of all these expense items donated to him by an admiring public? He would get ditched mighty quick and his name from henceforth and forever would be Dennis with a big D. The railway ticket agents and conductors, the hotel keepers, garage people, cigar men, boot-leggers, laundrymen, etc., are generally business men and they fail to fail for the glad-hand stuff and the endearing personal letters such as are habitually peddled to country newspapermen by politicians who must have publicity and who know from past experience that the average country newspaperman is a big enough dum fool to give his stock in trade for nothing.

Specific cases could easily be given in the present campaign of men who are seeking the nomination for the highest positions within the gift of the people of Oregon and who are spending money like water to advance their interests, who are sending out thousands of dollars worth of purely political advertising matter and asking that it be published without money and without price.

Most of them, it is true, early in the campaign, bought advertising space from most of the country newspapers to the amount of from $4 to $5 each and then followed that up with free "dope" which, charged for at regular rates, would amount to several times that amount each week. It is exactly the same proposition as though these gentlemen would go to a first-class hotel and buy a medium-priced supper and pay cash for it and then blandly ask the proprietor for free meals for a month with a deluxe room-with-a-bath thrown in as good measure. A candidate for office who would make such a proposition to any business man outside of a country newspaper office would probably be held for examination as to his sanity, and yet that is the very kind of stuff they are putting over on country editors every day.

It is not altogether the fault of the politicians—alho it might be argued that their pride and sense of fairness would keep them from making a play so raw—the newspaper men are primarily to blame. If they, as a class, had the wisdom of blind monkeys they would not stand for such treatment for a minute. There is not a man running for a state office in Oregon today but the country newspapers could put out of the running within two weeks if they wanted to. They have a power which many of themselves do not understand nor realize, and yet they are content to plug along like a train of heavily laden asses packing the loads of the political office-seekers who in return there for graciously allow them to browse their living from the scant and oft-times bitter herbage which starves among the rocks and thorns by the wayside.

The editors and publishers, then, should step under and assume at least one-half the blame for the conditions complained of.

The Food Situation

The food situation is becoming more serious. The lack of shipping will prevent the Argentine crop from being available to the Allies. The bread ration in France has been cut to one third the pre-war period. The French people are fighting our fight, hence we must feed them. The larger use of ships for transportation of men and munitions makes it more urgent that the concentrated food stuffs, such as flour be sent. This means that America must eat less wheat. What are we going to do about it? Idaho is planning to go upon a non-wheat basis. Indiana has notified the Government that it may take the wheat, they will rustle. Many complain about the cost of substitutes. It is not a question of cost. It is a question of saving wheat to win the war, or taking a chance on letting the Kaiser tell you what to eat.

The Food Administrator urges the people of Oregon to eat more potatoes. We have a surplus on hand. He also urges the people to plant potatoes in large quantities. The prices may not be so attractive now, but a large crop may save the food situation next year.

After the present stocks are sold, retail dealers are expected to require purchasers to take an equal amount of substitutes with all wheat preparations, such as wheat flakes, etc.

Morrow county has made good in all other lines and I am sending word to Mr. Ayer that Morrow county will make good on saving wheat.
