MOONSHINE CAMP

Another of Morrow county's "infant industries" has been nipped in the bud. While Sheriff George Mc-Duffee is a good official, a pleasant gettleman and something of a stickler for law enforcement there are those who say that as a promotor of certain manufacturing industries in Morrow county he is a decided frost. Likewise E. M. Shutt, who aspires to step into McDuffee's shoes after the next election, but who has recently been urging everybody to grab every dollar in sight with which to buy Liberty Bonds, joins hands with the sheriff and helps to put out of commission, or at least indefinitely postpone, a business that might have enabled its owner, had he been allowed to operate a little longer, to have taken up Morrow county's entire quota. Also County Agricultural Agent Brown, a man who is supposed to promote every branch of agriculture in the county, joins with the other two and takes an awful fall out of the corn meal business.

Sheriff McDuffee, it appears, got a hunch that Joe Hardy was operating a moonshine still in a still, quiet nook up on the east prong of Willow creek and the way the thing turned out proved that his hunch was not all "moonshine." Joe's still was either too handy to the sheriff's office or be failed to keep his business still enough for last Sunday McDuffee with Shutt and Brown drove up the creek some 23 miles and started a still hunt for a still. It was still daylight when after creeping thru the brush for some time the stillness of the mountains was broken by the dirp. dropping of moonshine from the still. Hoping that Handy was still handy around the place the trie closed in only to find that he had finished his day's work and gone away. The fire still burned and the oil of joy was still dripping from the still and several gallons of Handy's bandiwork was in evidence but Mr. Handy was conspicuous by his absence.

The sheriff and his party then withdrew to a point of vantage and started to wait for the proprietor's return and "Oft in the Stilly, (likewise chilly) Night" that followed they may have yearned for a nip of that warm, heartsome fluid that still drip-dropped from the still. We don't know. Still, many | folks would.

Next morning when Handy re turned to take up his daily toil in the interest of the conservation of real moisture in dry old Oregon the watchers pathered him in at the point of two whitefug tid guns. Joe admitted that he was so scared for a that he didn't know his own name but after he found that he was still Handy and the 23 gallons of "white mule" in stock showed that he had a mighty handy still.

The place was well selected for seluded operations. A fine spring supplied the water for cooling the "worm" and the camp was so camouflaged with trees and brush as not to be easily discovered. The plant was of 15 gallon per day capacity and for several months had been kept busy supplying moisture for the thirsty. Fifteen gallons of the booze was emptied into the creek and it is said the fish up that way have been having a big time. Handy says he will plead guilty when brought to trial. He is in the county Jail but will probably be taken to Portland in a day or two and turned over to the federal authorities.

Some Improvements Needed.

Immediate attention of the city ed to the need for cross-walks at some of the street Intersections. A good example to cite may be found at the corner of May and Chase on August 28, 1915, made Homestreets between the old Eastern hotel property and the Ayres corner. The plank crossing at the corner was torn out last spring when the street improvement work started and all summer the dust in that hole was ankle deep. When it rains a pond the full width of the street forms making the crossing impracticable without hip boots. People living out that way are getting pretty tired of this condition and they have a right to expect that immediate relief will be given by those in authority. If there is an official in the town whose duty it is to keep cross walks in a passable condition he should get busy at once, or the mayor or street committee should get busy at getting him busy. If there is no such official on the city roster one should be reated at once. Heppner people are bound to suffer some discomfort the coming winter because of the lack of sidewalks in the burnt district but those in authority should give them a chance to get across the streets without swimming.

I. O. O. F. Holds Open Meeting.

Willow Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows held an open meeting Wednesday evening the occasion being a visit from S. F. Bowman, Grand Conductor of the Grand Lodge of Oregon, and R. F. Kirkpatrick, representing the Encampment degree. Both gentlemen are residents of Pendleton.

Interesting addresses were made by the visitors and splendid musical numbers were given by Mrs. Darbee and Miss Thorley.

The Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Masonic fraternity have united in taking up relief work among their members in the American army in France and a commission composed of both orders is now investigating conditions over there to determine what is most needed to be done. This matter was discussed by Mr. Bowman in his talk and the action of the Sovereign Grand Lodge recently in session in St., Louis was related.

Mr. Kirkpatrick urged increased activity among the members of the Emcampment in Heppner and promsed to bring a delegation over from Pendleton in the near future to help boost the local branch of that degree.

Tom Sheridan Sells Banch. Thomas Sheridan reports the sale of his stock ranch on Butter creek recently, the purchaser being Antone Cuna who will make his home on he property. The tract comprised 320 acres of splendid grazing land and the price paid was $10 per acre Mr. Sheridan around for another place to buy his time preferring a stock ranch with some farming land where he an raise his own feed.

Loses Sheep on the Trail.

About 60 head of lambs belonging to L. V. Gentry were lost on the trail while coming from the Monument country last week. Mr. Gentry had bought the band and was having them brought to his own range when the loss occurred. Eleven of the lost animals have since been found near Parkers Mill and the others were found by Porest Ranger L. Keithley near his station Trailing sheep over mountain paths where feed is scarce and when the weather is hot is no sinecure and cases are not uncommon.

Roy Whiteis, well known real ostate and insurance bustler and grain buyer, has moved his office to he room formerly occupied by T. C. Dennesco. The place has Portland, thoroughly renovated and remodeled traveling representative of the Red and is at once comfortable and attractive. Mr. Whiteis wants the still in the market for wheat and is
