STAMP SHARKS FOILED BY NEW POSTAL RULING

Postmasters Ordered Not to Cash Brokered Savings Certificates.

Speculators dealing in War Savings Stamps are hit by the following orders just issued by Secretary of the Treasury Carter Glass and by the Office of the Postmaster General.

The following is quoted from a notice issued by the Secretary of the Treasury:

"My attention has been directed to numerous offers made by unscrupulous persons through advertisements and in other ways to buy war-savings certificate stamps and, as a result of such offers, I am informed that owners of such securities have suffered material losses which could have been avoided by redemption of the war-savings certificate stamps at post offices, as provided by law.

"In order that the interests of owners of war-savings certificate stamps of either series may be safeguarded, I hereby notify all persons to refrain from offers to buy war-savings stamps or accept the same in trade."

Following is the order of A. M. Dockery, Third Assistant Postmaster General:

"In pursuance of the foregoing, postmasters are directed not to pay war-savings certificates on which the names of the owners have not been entered or have been erased or changed, since, under the regulations, they are not transferable and are payable only to the original owners, except in case of death or disability.

"Postmasters are further instructed not to pay any war-savings certificates presented by persons or firms known to be buying, or publicly offering to buy, war-savings stamps or certificates from the owners, unless positive evidence is submitted that the certificates were originally issued to the persons or firms presenting them for payment.

"When consulted by owners of war-savings stamps in regard to offers to purchase such stamps at less than current value postmasters should invite their attention to the fact that war-savings certificates may be cashed at money-order post offices after 10 days' written notice, and that this is a privilege accorded by law. At the same time it should be pointed out that the need of the Government for the proceeds of the war-savings stamp issue is great, and the holders should be urged to retain their stamps until their necessities are urgent."

DRAGGING IS OF IMPORTANCE

Road Improvement May Well Be Considered Reconstruction Measure—Increases Farm Values.

Roads should not be neglected at this time in our endeavor to increase food production. Road improvement might well be deemed a reconstruction measure. In many communities they are much better than in others because the farmers are back of the good roads movement. They realize that a good road saves labor, time, horse flesh and automobile repairs and in addition increases the selling value of the farm. Every progressive farmer should have a road drag and not be afraid to use it. A well-dragged road is a well-crowned road, and a well-drained road. The dragging should follow each rain. If properly used it will bring a thin layer of earth toward the center of the road at each dragging. The travel will roll and solidify it between rains.

On roads where too much crown has been formed the angle of the drag can be reversed. A few draggings will reduce the high crown to a more level and much safer road for fast automobile traffic.

BUNGALOWS OF MODERATE SIZE

New Type Designed for Lots of Good Width.

SUN PORCH IS ATTRACTIVE

Home Shown in Illustration is Quite Compact in Arrangement and Has All Modern Conveniences.

By WILLIAM A. BARNETT
Mr. William A. Barnett has designed a new type of bungalow for lots of moderate size. The design is compact in arrangement and has all modern conveniences. It is a single-story house with a sun porch at the rear, which in summer makes an attractive breakfast room, and adds to the sense of spaciousness of the dining room. Toward the other side of the house is the kitchen, which also is of good size and is designed to accommodate the most modern kitchen equipment, so placed as to bring the greatest efficiency. To the rear of the kitchen is a porch, leading to the back yard.

The bedrooms are along one side of the house, one adjoining the living room, the other to the back of the house. Between the two bedrooms is the bathroom, which opens off a hall that connects the bedrooms. Double doors lead from the rear bedroom to the sleeping porch.

Thus it will be seen that although this would be termed a five-room house, it really is much larger. The graceful lines of this house, with the opportunity afforded for window boxes and flower beds and shrubs surrounding it, make it particularly attractive from the outside.

This advance in bungalow design embodies the ideas of a number of architects, who have devoted much study to designing small homes. This type of home is engaging the attention of the leading members of the architectural profession more and more, as those who build homes nowadays have learned that a little money spent for advice from experienced and capable architects is worth while.

Compact Arrangement.

The design and floor plan are recommended for study to those who intend to build. The more they are studied the more it will be found that here is an excellent design for the family that will build a home of moderate size. It is compact in arrangement, has all of what is generally termed "the modern conveniences" and leaves little to be desired in appearance.

Just one word about the desirability of building this year. The cessation of the war has released many thousands of men skilled in the building trades. It also has released quantities of materials that have been used in war work. Both materials and labor now are available in abundance, and when the things that are needed are plentiful it is a good time to go ahead with any plan that entails the expenditure of money.

SLANG TERM OF OLD ORIGIN

Appellation "Deadhead" First Came Into Use When Dead City of Pompeii Was Flourishing.

Did you ever stop and think why, if you are so fortunate as to acquire a free ticket to something you should be called a deadhead? The reason for this bit of slang dates way back to the days of the ancients. In the national museum in Naples there is a case of old theater tickets that the Pompeians didn't get a chance to use before their theater season was brought to such an abrupt close by the eruption of Vesuvius. They are made in various shapes, each shape showing which part of that particular ticket will admit you. You could get into the peanut gallery only when you presented the little pigeons, and to this day that gallery is called the pigeon loft in Italy. Then there were little skulls modeled of ivory, and these were used only by those who were to be admitted free. Hence, "deadhead."

Weird Sun Legend of Stonehenge.

In times of peace there was always an excursion to Stonehenge on June 20 to see the sun rise on the following morning, for on the 21st old Sol's first rays are supposed to strike the great altar-stone, on "Friar's Heel." This tradition tells us, used to be the signal for the sacrifice of human victims in the days that are long gone by, and it is easy, when there, to imagine the early Druids, in their white robes, oak-crowned and wearing the mystic symbols round their necks, gathering to make their offerings to Bel, as they called the sun, and to the serpent, the Beltine fies, glowing over the great plain the while.

HERALD WANT ADS GET THE BEST RESULTS

HER SACRIFICE

By PEARL S. MEYER.

Mabel carefully placed the dishes in the big, bright dishpan. Is further introduction necessary? Surely the discerning will understand that Mabel was mistress of the house, not maid.

Her gaze wandered often from her task to the view framed by the long window John had put in above the sink for this very purpose. And the view—the garden—kitchen garden, of course, but so attractively arranged in neat plots and so gayly bordered by nodding flowers that the eye could not help but reap joy and gratification with every casual glance—the low hedge and the fruitful, John-tilled fields beyond.

In Mabel's opinion, the whole view was there for only one purpose—to form a fitting background for the broad-shouldered figure of John. Shirt-sleeved, with arms comfortably crossed and supporting his favorite briar in one hand, he leaned against the granite gatepost and thought things out.

As if she could read through that thick mop of hair into his head, she knew his thoughts. She also knew they had been the same for weeks.

She watched him gravely, her hands hanging idly in the cooling water. He could never solve his problem alone.

Mabel wiped her hands deliberately, still gazing fixedly from the window. She felt that the moment for her to act had come. Leaving the dishes unwashed in the pan, she sped through the door, down the path and halted, panting at John's side.

She felt his gaze resting on her; but she could not lift her eyes. Staring hard at the pipe in his hand, she sought vainly for speech. The tumultuous thoughts that had flooded her mind so recently had ebbed as completely as if they had never been. At length:

"John, your pipe's gone out again."

"Bless me," ejaculated John, in an amused tone. "Is that what you ran all the way from the house to tell me?"

Angry with herself that she should be so cowardly, torn by emotions she could not express, Mabel hid a tear-wet face against her husband's sunburnt arm.

"Out with it, girlie," he said encouragingly.

Mabel raised her head and smiled into his eyes. Then she plunged into the very heart of her subject.

"You can enlist, John."

Her husband's face expressed mingled emotions. He slowly shook his head.

"You know as well as I do that my duty is here on the farm since I can find no one to take over the management. I can't leave and allow my crops to waste in the fields. What is the use of rebuking these arguments? I've gone over them a thousand times every day."

"I have a secret," commenced Mabel abruptly. "Last year when I visited Della, we both took the summer course in farming. Naturally, John—" her eyes twinkled—"I don't know quite as much as you; but I have been all ears and eyes ever since I returned. Haven't you noticed how many questions I've asked?"

John did not reply. He stood looking over her head far off toward the eastern horizon.

Mabel felt a catch in her throat, but went bravely on.

"I know all about farm accounting, and testing seed and—everything," she concluded comprehensively. "Really, John, dear, I studied awfully hard, and I've been at it ever since. I shall never again want to leave the farm to live in a city. Why, every time I turn round outdoors now I learn something new. I think if farmers' wives would all hire women to do their housework, and only had to think of meals to eat them, they could be so contented, and would feel so professional and grow so healthy working with their husbands out in God's fresh air. I have grown to love outdoors in such a wonderful seeing way that sometimes I can't stand the thought of a roof over my head."

As she talked, John's hands were tenderly smoothing her soft hair back from her eager, flushed face.

"Little wife, little wife," he whispered.

"John, dear, I honestly feel convinced that, with what advice our good neighbors would give me if I needed it, and what I can always receive from the university for the asking, I could manage. And with the whole department of agriculture fairly dissected up and down with eagerness to answer all my questions—how could I fail? I never dreamed how many friends the farmer has until I began to study and to pore through your line of compiled information." She looked anxiously into his face. "You believe me?"

"Believe—yes," he ejaculated. "But, dear, it isn't easy—even for a man."

She slipped her arms around his neck.

"Women are doing a thousand things today that are not easy—even for men. Shall I do less for others? There is nothing to keep you. You can go—John." His name had never sounded sweeter from her lips than at this moment.

He drew her closer to him, her dark head against his heart. For a long time they gazed deeply into each other's eyes; then, their faces turned toward the western sky where the last color-echo of the sunset glorified the clouds.

"Yes," he said softly, "I will go."
