BINDWEED IS CALAMITY WHEN ONCE ESTABLISHED

Oregon Agricultural College—Field bindweed, "decidedly the most dangerous weed in Kansas," is getting a good start in parts of Oregon, especially in the dry farming wheat districts where the summer fallow gives it just the chance it needs to spread and establish itself.

"This impurity is found chiefly in cereal seed samples sent for purity and germination tests," says Miss Grace Cole, seed specialist. "It does not occur in large quantities and can be eradicated if great care is used in seeding the cereal crops."

weeds described in the series of weed stories by Miss Helen Gilkey now running in the Sunday and Weekly Oregonian. Its distribution by root stocks, each joint of which will sprout a new plant, as well as by prolific seed, makes it exceedingly difficult to stamp out.

In addition to calling it the most dangerous weed in Kansas Mrs. E. G. Harling in charge of the seed testing laboratory at the Kansas agricultural college says that a small patch unless controlled, can overrun the whole farm in ten or fifteen years, making it agriculturally worthless.

Clean summer cultivation is the best method of control, reports B. F. Sheehan, of the college farm-crops department. Great care must be taken not to drag broken root stocks into uninfested areas or they will spread the plant more rapidly.

sent to the seed testing laboratory at the college, Corvallis, for free examination. If bindweed seed is present the seed can either be thoroughly cleaned or discarded for pure seed.

Mrs. S. W. Spencer, who has been in Seattle attending the Red Cross conference, also spending some time in Portland visiting friends on her way from the sound city, returned home Wednesday evening.

CONDON NEWSPAPERS CONSOLIDATE

George H. Flagg, a young newspaper man of long experience and marked ability has bought the two Condon newspapers, the Globe and the Times and will hereafter issue the Globe-Times, the two papers having been united under the dual name.

Mr. Flagg comes of a newspaper family, his father, E. H. Flagg, having for years engaged in the business in the lower Columbia river country. He is now publishing a paper at Warrenton.

George H. Flagg was at Prairie City for several years and a year ago sold out to enlist in the service of his country only to be turned down for some trifling physical cause. He had learned to love the bunch-grass country, however, and is now located in one of the best towns in eastern Oregon.
