ARMY MITIGATES REAL LIFE TRAGEDY

The story of an Oregon family, bravely fighting adversity to win the father free from the charge of murder; the story of a daughter's supreme sacrifice in the family's battle against odds made overwhelming by the influenza scourge; the story of a Salvation Army lassie's work of mercy through the long drear days of fever when a mother and seven children fought for life in cramped quarters; has come to light at Eugene, Oregon.

The death of the girl and the funeral, the gripping pathos of the stricken, accused father, alone of all the family of nine, torn by great sobs as he stood at the foot of the little grave, brought the case to the public attention. The Salvation Army has been taking care of the family for days, then.

Dr. Charles T. Wheeler, field representative of the Salvation Army Home Service Program for 1920 checked up on the case and it is in his report the real story is revealed. It is a chapter in the famous Charles L. Taylor murder case in which Martin Clark was convicted on circumstantial evidence, then granted a new trial. The case held the interest of Oregon for weeks. Dr. Wheeler writes from Eugene.

"Ensign J. L. Kelso spent an hour and a half today in a cell with a man being tried for murder. The Salvation Army officer is his next friend."

"Last July two men went hunting up the mountainside together, agreed to separate and meet later. One man did not show up. The alarm was given, they searched for days and finally found the body of the missing hunter with a deer strapped to his back. There was a place a little distance away where a man had stood in the bushes and had dropped two empty shells. Twigs cut where he had shot through the bushes.

"Suspicion, of course, fell on Clark, who had gone up the mountain to hunt with Taylor. He was arrested, found guilty on circumstantial evidence, given a new trial and has been in jail all this time, since last July.

"The family, his wife and seven children, sold their little place, the auto, the horses, the cattle and furniture, everything that would bring money—and they were in comfortable circumstances, to defent the father. The family made a heroic struggle to get along. The girl, Ethel, 16, went to work in a telephone office at $14 a week. The boy, 16, drove a truck. Out of the income of these two breadwinners the mother saved $100 during the last two months. Saved it to defend her husband. But the flu came last week and put them all down at the same time. The girl worked on Wednesday, took sick, went back Thursday, determined not to loose that $14 which would help her father. She was stricken at her work, went home—and Sunday made the supreme sacrifice. Her devotion had caused her death.

"Ensign Kelso and Mrs. Kelso, the sheriff and Clark went from the jail to the little home, where the prisoner conversed with the wife who was hot with fever, through a closed window. The father was the only one able to go to the cemetery, the others all lying sick. A big, strong mountaineer, he shook from head to foot, and all he could say at the grave was 'poor little girl.'

"The Salvation Army is taking care of the sick family. A Salvation Army lassie has been attending their slightest need night and day since the sickness struck. For days she did not have her clothes off.

"Today, in the prison cell, sitting along side of the stricken father, is Ensign Kelso, his 'next friend.'"

Precept and Practice.

Many a man who talks about getting a broad, clear view of the beautiful world spends most of his days sitting behind an unwashed window.—Washington Star.
